DESERET EVENING NEWS.

DESERET NEWS PUBLISHING COMPANY, LESSEES.

Thursday, September 17, 1896.

The Deseret Evening News is issued every evening except Sundays, at the Deseret News Building, Nos. 30 and 32 Richards street, Salt Lake City.

The Deseret Evening News is delivered by carriers in Salt Lake City at 15c per week. Regular edition of the Deseret Weekly.

The Deseret News Weekly takes a position at the head of the journalism of the Rocky Mountains. It is a 56-column paper, containing the news of the world, with a large amount of matter specially prepared for its readers in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, Mexico, Canada and Alberta. It is the best family paper in the West. Its market reports are complete and reliable, its editorial department able and vigorous, its correspondence from all parts of the Rocky Mountain region and from many other parts of the United States and Canada interesting and valuable, its miscellaneous matter of the best character, and its general contents such as to commend it to the attention of the intelligent people of the West. Its subscription price is $2.00 per annum, payable in advance.

The Deseret Evening News may be obtained every evening from the newsboys, or at the office, or will be delivered by carrier at the following rates:

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The sixty-seventh semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will convene in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning, October 4th, 1896.

The officers and members of the Church generally are cordially invited to attend the meetings of the Conference.

WILFORD WOODRUFF,
GEORGE Q. CANNON,
JOSEPH F. SMITH,
First Presidency.

TAXING REAL ESTATE.

In recent years the price of real estate in Utah was run up to fancy figures without regard to its value for any use to which it could be put. As a consequence, when the assessor went around, land was listed at its market value on those figures, making a very high assessment. By comparison with older and more thickly settled states, the rate of assessment on real estate in Utah is therefore enormously heavy. Now a change is imperative. The law requires that all property be taxed at its fair cash value. Since the financial depression the price of real estate has gone down; but on the assessment rolls much of the land in different localities now is racked far above what it would bring on the market, or what the owner would be glad to dispose of it for. A fair cash value means that now, with the reduced prices, the assessment of real estate also will come down. The probability is that the raised prices of land used for cultivation will go still lower, and that holders will cut still farther the figures at which they will dispose of such property for cash when they want to sell. With this same probability comes the accompaniment of reduced value on the assessment rolls; so that the outlook is that are long the assessed value of real property in the State will be based on its value for the uses to which it can be reasonably put, and thus will be more equitable towards the holder who is actually utilizing his land than a valuation under speculative conditions possibly can be. When this point is reached there will be taken one step that brings the State nearer to the equalization of the burdens of taxation than it is at present.

CHILDREN'S EYESIGHT.

The reopening of the public schools for another year again brings to the fore the discussion as to the effect of the school buildings and appurtenances on the eyesight of pupils. Upon this point recent tests by competent oculists are of special interest just now. In Baltimore the eyes of 38,067 pupils were examined by the tests ordinarily used by oculists; 9,051 pupils were found to have such defective eyesight as to make school work unusk; 88 per cent of the children were found not to be in the enjoyment of normal vision. Curiously enough the percentage of defective eyesight steadily decreased with the age of the pupils. The percentage of normal vision was found to be as follows in the different grades: First grade, 38; second, 41; third, 47; fourth, 49; fifth, 48; sixth, 49; seventh, 54, and eighth, 55. No explanation is offered for this improvement in eyesight with age and the use of the eyes under school conditions.

In Great Britain, also, a report has been presented to the education department of the government on the vision of 8,125 children attending 23 elementary schools in London; 3,151 children, or 38.78 per cent, were found to have normal vision in both eyes; 1,024, or 12.5 per cent, had normal vision in the right eye and subnormal in the left; 700, or 8.6 per cent, had normal vision in the left eye and subnormal in the right; and 3,250, or 39.9 per cent, had subnormal vision in both eyes. Comparing the sexes, the total was found to be 3,958 boys and 4,197 girls; or there 41.7 per cent of the boys had normal vision in both eyes, and 38.4 per cent of the girls.

In the English report, the opinion is expressed that the eyes of London school children generally are not injuriously affected by the conditions of elementary school life there, there being no increase of visual frailties as the pupils grew older; the cause of subnormal vision in so many of the children is attributed to the fact that they rarely look at distant objects, and thus fail to cultivate strength in the organ of sight. In Baltimore, however, it was found that many blackboards and maps in the schools were not placed in the proper light, and the report of the oculists recommends yearly examinations hereafter of the pupils' eyesight and that a uniform system of adjustable seats and desks be adopted and that these be regulated to the heights of the children.

In one particular, these examinations indicate a negligence on the part of parents, who ought to pay more care to children's eyesight than to allow such a condition as that shown, that nearly one-fifth of the total number are unfit to do school work because of defective vision. In very many cases, it was asserted, the defects could have been remedied by plenty of outdoor exercise and good food, much of the trouble being characteristic of bloodlessness; the practice of looking at distant objects also gives relief, and causes really to those children who have plenty of open air, and who uniformly have the best eyes. The point of this is that much of the imperfection shown in the visual organs is directly due to that which causes more ill health than anything else—the unreasonable persistence with which parents, especially mothers, insist on housing up their children and starving them physically through a groundless fear that the sunlight will "ruin all their complexion," or that plenty of fresh, cool—not chilled—air will give them "colds," when in fact air and sunlight are unyielding foes to both the ills complained of.

THE WOOL OUTLOOK.

Bradstreet's for Sept. 12 gives the figures of the domestic wool clip for 1896, as compiled by the national association of wool manufacturers. The estimate is based on the return of the number of sheep on April 1, this year, which showed a total of 36,964,405—a loss of 3,464,962 from last year's figures, and the smallest total reported since 1875. Here are the figures for four states: Colorado 1,288,378 sheep; average weight of fleece 6½ pounds; wool 8,484,018 pounds; shrinkage 68 per cent. Idaho 978,402 sheep; average weight of fleece 7½ pounds; wool 7,300,515 pounds; shrinkage 68 per cent. Wyoming 1,193,134 sheep; average weight of fleece 6 pounds; wool 10,369,184; shrinkage 68 per cent. Utah 1,862,519 sheep; average weight of fleece 6 pounds; wool 11,415,090; shrinkage 68 per cent. In the whole country the clip for 1896 amounts to 232,474,708 pounds, in which the average fleece weighs 6.39 pounds and the shrinkage averages 63.7 per cent; to which is added 65,000,000 pounds of pulled wool—a grand total of 272,474,708 pounds, which is reduced by scouring to 115,284,679 pounds.

The 272,474,708 pounds of wool in the greasy or washed condition is a decrease from 294,295,725 pounds in 1895, and is the smallest product of wool since 1889. The decrease in clip is relatively less than the decrease in the number of sheep, because of the gradual increase in the weight of fleeces since 1875. Of the whole visible supply of wool in the country, these figures show a reduction of about 40,000,000 pounds from that of a year ago. Optimistic this might seem to indicate that there was in store a prospect of better figures. But this is not the case. The comparatively small consumption of wool to date is a suggestion that there is a large supply in the storehouses of manufacturers, held in await a revival of business, which does not appear in the foregoing figures, and which makes the quantity on hand far in excess of the probable consumption for the year to come. This will keep the price down, so that the outlook for an increase in the figures to wool producers does not appear in sight for the wool clip of 1897. Even the shortage in the Australian clip is insufficient to make a raise in prices.

NOT JUST THE THING.

The old saying that "all is fair in love and war" often is quoted as applicable to politics; but in connection with the latter there are some things that hardly can be called fair. One of these is in connection with woman's enjoyment of the official franchise. While women was not accorded the privilege of equal suffrage, it was quite a proper thing for the principle of gallantry to interpose and relieve her of male competitors to the limited list of callings that were open to her. But when the bars were thrown down as they have been in Wyoming, Colorado and Utah, it is no longer justifiable to shout, when a man on one ticket is opposed by a woman for the same office as another, that the latter is unmanly because he accepts a candidacy for a joint session by a woman. Hence the following, from a Wyoming paper, is rather a reflection than otherwise on woman's ability to make the race an equal one for the office:

That struggling lily, also-looked boy, Charlie Ora, has jumped in early and taken an office of nearly equivalent value of salaries from a woman. It was a disgraceful proceeding, and it has been noticed to not women of both parties. For little sense in the convention and acceptance of the job by such a man as Ora, who is in spite of his office and who has made one of the best superintendents the county ever had. And it has to be repeated again that Mr. Ora going will make a place in the fight against beer, whether he also may be.

It is scarcely the fit to associate with school and educational matters are less suited to the gentler sex; but there is no occasion to put them there on the plea of being helpless, or to cry against an opponent that he is cowardly or ungallant in trying to "beat a woman." There is no cowardice or unpolitely in a fair competition for an office, and if both sexes are eligible all around, there should be no question on the ground of sex or woman—both are citizens on an equal rights platform. If the lady referred to needs the office, and the people need her as one of the best they have met in the position, she is good enough to stand on her qualifications for the office and to get there on her merits, without being made to appear small and pitiful by an appeal to the sentiment which regards women as an inferior creature.

A PICTURE OF OUR TIME.

A French author, Melchior de Vogue, has attempted to draw a picture of our time with special regard to its moral tendencies. He compares it to the time of the decline of the Roman empire at the beginning of our era. He finds that all through the human family can be heard a heartrending cry for truth, for justice and for peace, and the cry becomes all the more appealing as the situation becomes more desperate. Our time is selfish, doubting, elegant and cruel, still beautiful in the bewitching glitter of art and poesy; but it is dead as regards faith, and poor in piety, superstitious in nearly everything else, paralyzed by the noise of conflicting ideas and wild fancies without any creative thought; brought to starvation by feeding on the recollections of happiness and eagerly watching the falsehoods of theatres; proudly pretending to understand everything but really unable to revere anything. It has no power to follow the biddings of duty, but is vain in its heavy, dear to truth, indifferent to misery; asking of earth to be carried in a merry parade to the end of the festival and closing its eyes to the catastrophes it prepares for coming generations.

A stern civilization, but who can otherwise than feel its justice? Is there any other remedy for this condition than that which is offered by the messenger from the eternal Author of our existence? Philosophy has failed; human theology is helpless. Back, then, to the fountain of living water that already has proved its power to save the human family at the most critical periods of its history!

SILVER FOR GOLD.

Several papers recently have contained articles stating that Dr. Stephen H. Emmens, a New York chemist, has discovered a process whereby silver can be changed into gold. In a letter to the New York Journal, the doctor explains that the basis of his discovery is the results of experiments in reducing metallic silver in such minute subdivisions as to be dissolved in water while in a metallic state. He asserts that by refined processes he has been enabled to reduce the subdivisions still further, until the substance actually lost the properties of silver and assumed new properties. This substance, he alleges, is a new element standing between silver and gold, and capable, by condensation and great increase of density, of being converted into gold. The practical, Dr. Emmens states, has been submitted by him to all the tests of the government assay office, and its reactions are absolutely identical with those of gold. He claims that he will be able to make 3 ounces of gold from 1 ounce of silver, at a cost not exceeding $10 per ounce of silver treated; the profit would then be not less than $5 per ounce.

TO CORRESPONDENTS. If you wish your letters to be published and read, do not make them so long that at first glance they make one feel that life is too short to undertake the task of perusing them; if you wish to make them interesting, boil down to writing, and avoid the necessity of "cutting" by the editor to get them into a reasonable space.

THE CHANGES in the national debt the past ten years have been as follows: Cleveland's first term, 1885 9, decrease, $203,336,013; Harrison, 1889 93, decrease, $271,190,565; Cleveland, second term, increase, $137,655,811. Net decrease, $467,890,767.
