The total thus far is $[illegible]. This is a good showing for two days' canvass. The regular subscription subs for $1 with each donor, though more than this may be given where the parties are so inclined. Mr. Montgomery has also sent out the following circular to each bank, postoffice and mine in the Territory, but has not as yet received any reply:

"My dear sir—In this time of general financial distress and disturbance, we must stand united to achieve any desirable results tending to the amelioration of our condition or the reinstatement of silver, the mining of which is an industry on which we men of Utah particularly depend.

"We draw your attention to the resolutions and call adopted by the Real Estate exchange, as published in the Salt Lake papers of the 15th inst; also those adopted at the silver demonstration, as published on the 15th inst. In accordance with the first resolutions we are sending subscription lists as enclosed to all the business centers of Utah, hoping they will each donate liberally for such desirable results. For every one must be convinced that a dollar invested in this manner will return a hundredfold.

"We pray you will give this matter your immediate attention by sending out some energetic, influential citizen to canvass your community, and send the proceeds to me as soon as collected so that we may use it at once. We will publish in the local papers from time to time a list of subscribers and amounts."

STRUCK GOLD.

Silver, Idaho, Mattresman: A dispatch from Idaho City says that a clean up of about $100 per ton has just been made from nine tons of ore from the Lincoln mine, in Gamblins district, owned by Henry Johnson, Julie Linstead and O. A. Duguette. This is one of the mines that was worked in the early history of the place, but abandoned by the company that originally erected the mill to work it. For many years it laid idle. In last it was only relocated a few years ago. Three or four years ago a crushing was made that yielded $35 per ton in free gold. The present owners resumed work on it a short time ago and have taken out, besides the high grade ore crushed, 10 or 15 tons that will go $25 or $30 per ton. In resuming work they broke through what was supposed to be one of the walls and ascertained that it was only a hard streak in the ledge. They cross-cut and found the ledge to be from 80 to 100 feet in width of ore that will mill from $10 to $100 per ton in free gold. The most precious metal can be seen in all of the rock, and, although developed to the depth of only forty feet, they certainly have one of the greatest of the gold mines of the country. The ledge is traceable for a long distance. To the depth to which the mine is developed there is enough ore to keep the Blaine five-stamp mill working for the next two years.

TRUST MORTGAGE.

The Saltair Beach Company has filed with the county recorder a first trust mortgage for $300,000 in favor of the Utah Loan & Trust Company of Ogden. The loan is in $1000 twenty-year coupons, payable in gold on July 1, 1913. Interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. All the property of the company, including the Saltair Beach resort and land owned by the company in the neighborhood is included in the mortgage.

SOLID.

Governor W. J. McConnell, of Idaho, is on a visit to Utah, and today is inspecting mines at Park City. He says Idaho is suffering much more than Utah from the slump in silver.

By a mutual agreement between the White Ash Coal Mining company and creditors, the White Ash coal mine in Dodge, Colo., has been turned over to creditors. Several month's pay from the miners, and the mine will be operated by them until the back debt is paid.

The Seven Star mine, Arizona, which was secured by Dr. Walker and others on guaranteed dividends, is virtually closed, as the miners have not been paid their wages. On overexamination the original owners are dropping the property.

Times Dispatch: F. W. C. Hathenbrook of this city has been invited by the Salt Lake committee to join as a member of the Utah delegation to attend the convention on Silver Day at the World's Fair. Mr. Hathenbrook's business affairs at present are in such condition that he has been compelled to decline the honor.

The Maid of Erin silver mines, the largest in the camp and among the heaviest producers in Leadville, Colorado, are being entirely abandoned, as the miners declined to accept the reduced rate of $2.50 per day as wages. The enormous cost of pumping, with no prospect of being able to resume work, has induced the owners to take this step. The pumps are being pulled and the mine will soon be entirely under water. The shaft is down 1,000 feet and has been the work of seven years and the expenditure of vast sums of money. Should the mine resume work again a new shaft will have to be sunk, as the old levels will be useless after being covered with water.

LIGHTNING'S FREAKS.

A Night of Terror in Pennsylvania.

Strange and Disastrous Results of Ohio Thunder-Storms.

"I was once driving over the Martinsville, in the lower part of this county, with my wife and baby, flying from a thunderstorm that was coming up rapidly in the valley," said a resident of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, to a New York Sun reporter, "but I only did not escape from the storm, but ran right into another one equally as heavy on the very summit of the ridge. When the two storms, traveling in opposite directions, met directly over our heads, streaks and balls of fire began playing around like the spinning and exploding effusions of a miscellaneous collection of Fourth of July pyrotechnics. Lightning danced and flashed on every hill or mountain there was on my horses' backs, worried around with the tires on all four of the wheels, and ran about and zigzagged everywhere around the buggy frame, until we were literally sitting in a fiery circle drawn by a team crazed to flaming fierceness.

"It was not only the sight of this most extraordinary electrical display, but the snapping, crackling and exploding of the lightning, like a continuous volley of musketry, that struck us dumb with terror. The poor horse was so much scared to run away, the fire and noise seemed to have just the contrary effect upon him, and it was all I could do to urge him forward. On each side of the road trees were being splintered and shivered by thunderbolts every few feet. I like way and the terror of the crashing [illegible] glare of the forked lightning, and the noise made by the trees as they were riven by the bolts was sometimes so one can describe. In going a mile, where we reached a house, we saw six trees, seven pigs, two horses and eighteen sheep killed by lightning on either side of both sides of the road. Neither myself, my wife or child suffered the slightest physical injury or inconvenience from that awful play of electricity about us, and the horse seemed to be injured by it, but the nervous strain on us all was terrible. That extraordinary electrical disturbance lasted at least a quarter of an hour.

"Well, I thought that was a little the queerest sort of an experience with lightning that one ever had, but was ever likely to have, but I have just come back from a visit to Ohio, and I want to say that that experience of mine might have been the loss queer one up to this summer, but it isn't any more. I fell across some others in Ohio that can beat it.

"Take the one, for instance, at Bailyville. I got to Bailyville at about noon one day. A thunderstorm had just passed over that locality and the clouds had nearly all broken away or rolled to the southward. The sun had come out and all nuisances on account of the storm had passed away—for thunderstorms in that region are nearly always attended by more or less damage—when the most terrific thunder clap ever heard there or elsewhere, so close to the earth that the earth trembles as it from an earthquake, and preceded not more than a second by a flash of lightning of blinding sharpness, broke from the cloudless morning sky. The sudden appearance and terrible nature of the startling phenomenon paralyzed the farming community with alarm, and it was several minutes before any one ventured forth to see what damage had been done by the thunderbolt. Some very amazing things were discovered. In a field on the edge of the village a large flock of sheep were pasturing. The sheep had all huddled together, as sheep will during a thunderstorm, and were still huddled when the surprise clap came. When the owner of the sheep went to the field to see if anything had awaken his flock he found every sheep, standing just as they had huddled in the storm, but out of the forty-eighty sheep were dead. Not one of the dead sheep had fallen to the ground. That was strange enough, but the eighteen dead sheep were black sheep, all the others in the flock being white and unburnt. Each dead sheep had a hole in the back of the neck around which the wool was burned away.

"That was all the damage that was reported during the hour I was in Bailyville, but it was enough to convince me that Ohio lightning knows a few tricks that Pennsylvania lightning had not learned yet.

"My friend Simon Frey lives at Big Oil Valley with his wife and seven-year-old baby. One day Simon was hurrying home from the valley, trying to get there before a big thunderstorm that was coming up caught him. The rain began falling before he got there, and was coming down for certain when he drove into his barn. Simon stood in the barn door waiting for the rain to slack up when the house was struck by lightning. It seemed to hit both chimneys at once, and a stream of fire ran from one chimney along the peak of the roof, and midway between the two chimneys it met another stream of fire that was flashing along the peak from the other chimney, or, rather where the chimney had been, for both chimneys were knocked into kindling by the lightning. When the two fiery elements met in the center of the ridge house there was a terrific explosion like the discharge of a cannon, and a shower of brick flew out that threw full scaling and crackling sparks and jagged fire each way into the first heat too feet. Then all was over, the whole exhibition lasting not more than three seconds.

"Simon was only three rods away from the house, but felt not the slightest effects of the terrible shock. He ran to the house, not knowing what horrifying sight might await him there, as it seemed impossible that his wife and baby could have escaped death beneath that terrible electrical bombardment. But they had, and after the first shock of the fright was over, almost couldn't do anything else but be cross and scolding turn with laughter, the lightning had brought about so indirectly a situation in the house. Mrs. Frey was sitting on the kitchen table, her head resting against the wall. Young hopeful was a rolling pin, while the other was buried to the waist in a kid of dough. She was covered with flour from head to foot. The baby lay in a basket of newly washed clothes in a far corner of the kitchen, jerking at the lines in the dough. The basket cradle was turned upside down in the center of the room.
