Tampering with American Juries.

Seven years ago, on the 20th of March, 1884, began the tumult in Cincinnati. The worst outbreak occurred on Saturday night, March 29. The damage done on the date of Ohio something like a million dollars and the loss of many valuable records. Forty-five persons were killed and 138 wounded, according to the best information.

The riot was an outcome of public dissatisfaction with the verdict rendered by the jury in the case of the negro murderer Hornet. The murder was of a peculiarly aggravated nature, and public sentiment had decided that Hornet ought to hang. When, therefore, the verdict of manslaughter was brought in by the jury, the dissatisfaction arrayed itself against Hornet's friend. Charges were general that the jury had been tampered with and unduly influenced. The mob rose and wreaked vengeance accordingly.

The jury got out of the way as best they might, and it was long before the foreman dared to return to Cincinnati.

This great jury mob and riot occurred because the public believed the jury's verdict was an outrageous one, obtained by unjustness means. In the spring month, March, on the same day of the week, just seven years later, came the mob tragedy in New Orleans for exactly the same cause—vengeance for what was believed to be an outrageous jury verdict in a murder case. It is to be hoped that more than seven years will elapse before another such tragedy occurs in America. But perhaps juries will now begin to take warning.

Observe Arbor Day.

Let us observe Arbor Day, all of us who can. Plant trees of some kind. Let it be either fruit trees or nut trees usually, but, for there are plenty of trees that can give a double reason for their being. Then after one of these is planted, take care of it and see that it does not die. Let us find out, those fortunate souls who can observe Arbor Day, what trees grow the best and are most probable in our locality, and then set them out tenderly, enduring nonsensists to us through the generations.

The attention of community is becoming more and more persistent in the devastating, frightful results of stripping timber from about the head waters of streams and rivers. The movement for the preservation of the Adirondack forests is a step in the interests of self preservation on the part of New York citizens. If the woods were permitted to be destroyed the great Hudson river itself would become shallow and unnavigable for much of its length.

In his speech before the chamber of commerce of Rochester Judge Warren Higley, of New York, gives some forcible illustrations of the ruinous results of denuding headwaters of their protecting trees and woodlands. Judge Higley is a man in the prime of life, yet the illustrations are drawn from his own observation. He says:

Let me give you a smaller illustration of the effects of cutting off the forests in a small river, drawn from my own observation and experience. In Cayuga county stream that thirty or forty years ago was the home of trout for miles and miles and miles, and furnished a motive falling supply of water to the farms, now goes dry in summer, with the exception of one and there a stagnant pool, the dam is dressed and washed away, the mills gone and the entire landscape so much changed as to be almost unknown. To wit, the warm rains of spring and summer have washed the denuded hillsides into the banks and with a stationary area, forces bringing in sandstones, spring saws lost. The round rocks used to be turned into the river and whatever parade about the first of April you may see kept close to earth the middle of May. Freshets that used to come to be looked for every year with hardly. Still have almost disappeared, and the crop is the exception rather than the rule. The extremes of heat and cold are greater and drouths in summer and floods in springtime are more frequent and more destructive. Time the scenery in the valley and the course of those things is apparent. The old industries among the work to supply the boys and girls with remunerative work, and to which the creek had its beginning, has all been cut away. The variety wooded land, underbrush, through which the stream ran in its course, to the lake, have been cleared, and most merely some lone groves to relieve the fields and pastures.

The cutting away of the forests from the head waters and the banks of their streams accounts largely for the changes I have noted, and the picture I drew can be seen by another eye in western New York. It is not difficult for those who know the effect of stripping the forests from small areas around the head waters of the smaller streams to understand what would be the effect if the Mississippi, the Missouri and the Ohio rivers were to be stripped of their timber, where it was easy and common to see and know why the Hudson, the Mohawk and the Genesee are so much lower in summer and higher in spring than in former years. The gentle deforesting of the Adirondack region has sufficiently demonstrated the fact that more than great water shed whereof the Hudson drains the Empire State would lose its prestige, and New York city cut back as the first commercial city of the New World.

The failure of a bank in Illinois will cause serious loss and inconvenience to some people who have checks on the village, it is said. The reason of it was that the bank was the depository of a considerable fund which supported the Congo missions that were under the charge of Bishop Taylor. The missionaries appear to have practiced buying native children from the chiefs and putting them into the Christian schools. They called this "redeeming" the youthful captives. They educated them to civilized ideas. The missionaries got hold of a boy for nothing, but girls very had to pay thirty dollars apiece for. Mentions the chiefs got rich and fat, and everybody was happy all around. It seems, however, a peculiar way of suppressing the slave trade.

The owner of a well known patent medicine in Pennsylvania is serving his time in the penitentiary, while his palace has been turned into a school house.

Who shall say the laws of this country are respecters of either persons or money? Mr. Jay Gould was fined $500 recently for not reporting when he was summoned for jury duty, and he had to pay too.

Six young bachelors of Lida, Minn., want six good girls to go out there from the east and marry them. Before sending girls they don't know to come and send them these bachelors should ponder well the words of Hamlet, "Rather bear those ills we have than fly to others that we know not of."
