A SPECIAL HOLIDAY.

Acting Governor Richards Will Issue a Proclamation For It.

IT WAS SO THIS AFTERNOON.

Police Will be Asked to Suspend Business, Rejoice and Give Thanks.

Governor Richards at 4 o'clock this afternoon announced that he would this evening issue a special proclamation declaring next Monday next following the day on which the President's proclamation is issued admitting Utah as a State, as a public holiday.

"It will not," said Mr. Richards this afternoon, "be a day for Thanksgiving and fasting, but a day for thanksgiving and rejoicing. The people will be asked to suspend all business on that day as far as possible, and I shall recommend that the schools be closed and the children thus given an opportunity to witness a great patriotic celebration."

IMPERIAL PARADE.

Generals Cannon and Burton this afternoon went up to Fort Douglas and consulted with General Forrest with reference to the big parade on inauguration day, but there is nothing definite for the public just yet.

Will Not Parade Separately.

Some of the leading Scandinavians, representing both of the political parties, met in the Fourteenth ward assembly room, December 28th, to consider the advisability of making a great Scandinavian display on Utah's Inaugural Day, Monday next, or mingle with the rest of the Americans in the grand parade. F. M. Fernstrom was made chairman and John M. Nielsen secretary. Several of those present spoke and the general desire was that a committee should be appointed to issue a call, inviting all the Scandinavian Americans to turn out in as great a number as possible and join the parade. The committee consisted of D. Rich Ivins, John M. Hansen and L. A. Cronquist, who is Dr. Ridgley's office and formulated the following:

Resolved, That we as Scandinavian American citizens turn out in as large a number as possible next Monday and join in the grand parade to celebrate Utah's admission into the Union as a sovereign State; that we by so doing may show that we value the great blessing of statehood and gladly resume our part of the responsibility consequent therewith.

THE COMMITTEE.

JUDGE SMITH SAYS FAREWELL.

He Makes a Neat Little Speech to Police Officers—Good Feeling Prevails.

The two years' incumbency of Police Justice Orson H. Smith is at an end, expiring today, and attorneys having cases in the police court hereafter, for two years at least, will have occasion to address Mr. D. H. Wenger, as he having been elected to that position, will commence his duties in that capacity on Thursday, January 3rd, 1896.

Whatever differences, if any, may have existed between the officers of the police force, and Justice Smith, were certainly cast aside this afternoon when the retiring judge called into the courtroom the officers of the afternoon force, and in some well chosen words, bade them farewell. His speech was substantially as follows:

"Before adjourning the police court for the last time I wanted to say a word or two to the members of the police department. During the past two years I have had the privilege of seeing your labors in the department, and I can say gentlemen, in all truthfulness, that you have performed your duties faithfully and well. I can commend you to the citizens of this city as being capable, efficient officers, and without boasting I can say that I know of no better police department in the world. Whatever friction may have come up between us while working together, I step down from this position, with nothing but feelings of kindness, good-will and fellowship to you all. For my successor I bespeak words of good feeling and hope that you will extend that spirit of friendship to him that you have manifested towards me."

As the officers filed out of the court room to take their respective places on the street, it was evident from their countenances that they appreciated the good feeling shown to them by the retiring police justice, who has apparently given general satisfaction during his incumbency. It is believed Mr. James will succeed himself as clerk, in which position he was appointed by Judge Smith.

As such they expect to swell the marching ranks by several hundred and give more other assistance as lies within their power.

FOR STEALING A WATCH.

John Berryman Tried for Unlawfully Taking Eva Nelson's Gold Watch.

John Berryman was tried before Judge Smith today on the charge of robbery, the offense being the alleged theft of a gold watch from Eva Nelson, who rooms in the O'Brien lodging house on Commercial street, last Saturday night.

The fact, as elicited at the hearing before press time, were to the effect that Berryman and a man named Johnson, both of whom live at the same house, went into Eva's room to have a social cast. They gave the woman a few drinks, and shortly afterwards she became somewhat stupefied "and didn't know anything" so she told down on her bed. It was while she was lying in the bed that it is supposed the alleged theft occurred, as Eva and her wages on her person. When she fell down, the watch strikes she found it was gone, and took it for granted that Berryman had stolen it as he was the only one in the room at the time. Attorney Hutchinson represents the defendant while Assistant County Attorney Harrington is prosecuting the prosecution.

SO ANGRY AS UNDER DEATH.

CURIOUS TESTIMONY OF A GERMAN PROFESSOR.

Dr. Heim, the celebrated geologist and professor of the Zurich university, declares that sudden death by a fall, by being struck by or by being swept, blown up by machinery, water, or by snow avalanche, is the most beautiful way of leaving this life—is indeed preferable to any other mode or fashion of departure for the unknown regions.

"To drop from a precipice," says the doctor, "seems subjectively speaking, as glorious an end to the victim of accident as death on the battle field. It strikes a man suddenly, without asking one to become acquainted with those nasty outlaw's of bodily dissolution, sickness and pain, while the mind is clear and during increased mental activity he takes flight without the least feeling of uneasiness. I have looked into the faces of many Alpine climbers who met death by unlucky falls, and like others, failed to find a trace of nervous sufferers, of fear, anxiety, pain or terror.

"The death agony—if, indeed, we can speak of such under the circumstances—did not last a minute, neither was it of a painful character. If it had been, its photographic counterpart would appear on the victim's face. I have viewed the bodies of the brothers Wallstein, who recently died by falling off the Jungfrau. The faces of both these young men bore the stamp of serene happiness. I am quite sure that, as they were falling to their graves, they experienced the same lofty feelings that I and others underwent while standing at the threshold of eternity. Their happy and composed features indicate that at the time of death they were above physical pains.

"In case of accident followed by sudden death the state of mind of the sufferer is not precisely by any means, and while the body is undergoing this condition a second is equal to a thousand years in duration to the mind of the stricken person. When the loss of consciousness ensues it does so with rapidity unknown. Death, following in the wake of unconsciousness, makes no change physically or mentally perceptible by the victim, the state of quietude, of painless expunction, remains undisturbed.

"No, there is not even that feeling of paralyzing terror in falling sudden death, as it would appear the sudden death, which overcomes one in the event of lesser danger. Neither myself nor the half hundred renowned victims of Alps climbing whom I have interviewed on the question expressed anything of the sort in the supreme moment. Our feelings—those of myself and colleagues in danger—corresponded in all respects, we were either incapable of thinking, was unconscious, or rapid, but at the same time full of self-possession.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.
