FUNERAL OF JUDGE MACKILLAN.

Most forty members of the Weber bar assembled out of the courthouse yesterday at the conclusion of the morning session of court, and walked in a body to the residence of the late Judge Maccallan to pay the last tribute of respect to the dead of Judge Maccallan. Judge Sandall commenced in the morning that out of respect to Judge Maccallan he had which a number of cases, and he would hear no more cases that day. The Judge then adjourned court and the members of the bar then walked in a body to the residence of the late Judge Maccallan, where the funeral services were held. The fellow was taken to the police office where he was fined $10 and costs, and could not pay, so he was locked up in the city jail. The lady in question, it is said, is the wife of a well-known Ogden man.

Contract W. J. Jones of the First Baptist church, Ogden, and Miss Ella Fisher, organist of the Tabernacle, were married in the Tabernacle. Friends are not a little surprised at the news, as it was only a week ago that the happy couple were seen together in the Tabernacle, and no one suspected that they were married. The Tribune, Herald, Times and Standard, which are all in the city, all had the news in their issues of Friday, and it was the talk of the town. The bride is a sister of the street railway company
