BURNED TO THE GROUND.

The Horn Silver Mine Hoisting Works Completely Destroyed.

Word comes from Frisco, Utah, that the splendid concentrating plant and hoisting works at that place were completely destroyed by fire on Wednesday night. It is supposed that the fire was the work of an incendiary. The loss is estimated at $50,000 and no insurance was carried. During the progress of the conflagration the timbering of the main shaft was ignited and burned down to a depth at present unknown. The mine is filled with smoke and a lurking conflagration is well nigh impossible at this time. Two miners barely escaped with their lives. All of the men were hoisted from the mine but six, and they were obliged to climb the ladders from the 700 feet level through the air shaft. About 150 men are thrown out of employment by the fire.

New Bridge at Gordon's.

The old wooden bridge which spanned Big Cottonwood creek for so many years on the State Road at Gordon's, is being torn down and the debris hauled away. A great amount of slag from the smelters is being conveyed to the banks of the stream and placed in position on either side in order that the new bridge erected there may have safe, solid and substantial backings.

A short "sulphurous" report from the building inspector was handed to the committee on sites and buildings.

The matter of settling the controversy between the board and the Salt Lake Fuel Stock Company for $7,000, which caused a deadlock at the meeting of the Washington school building committee, was referred to the president and clerk to draw a written letter in favor of the board, and for a similar document to be sent to the Absex. The Holland and Stone offer for the lot in question was referred back to the committee.

The committee on sites and buildings reported that the architects had submitted plans for the new school building situated on Fifth West, between Fifth and Seventh South streets.
