NO TRUST TRAITS IN NATIONAL GAME

Organized Clubs Have Proved Of Great Benefit to All Concerned.

AUGUST HERMAN EXPLAINS.

Chairman of National Commission Gives His Views on Agreement Relating to Players.

August Herman, chairman of the national commission, has been asked some interesting questions he has answered in the following manner:

Do you consider organized baseball a trust? If not, why not?

I do not. I was one of the number of members of the original committee that formulated and recommended for adoption what is known as the "National Agreement." I was and am familiar with its purposes and intents, and know that its adoption was prompted only by a desire to advance the interests of all interested in the national game—the club-owner, the patron and everyone connected with the game. No better illustration of this can be given than by calling attention to the objects of the agreement as set which are as follows:

OBJECTS OF NATIONAL AGREEMENT.

(a) Perpetuation of baseball as the national pastime of America, by surrounding it with such safeguards as will warrant absolute public confidence in its integrity and uprightness and by maintaining a high standard of skill and sportsmanship in its players.

(b) Protection of the property rights of those engaged in baseball as a business without sacrificing the spirit of competition in the conduct of the clubs.

(c) Promotion of the welfare of ball players as a class by developing and perfecting them as to their profession and enabling them to secure adequate compensation for experience.

(d) Adoption of a uniform code of rules for playing baseball.

How much money is invested, approximately, in the game in this country?

I have never given this feature of the game any special study, but my judgment is that it represents from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000. An approximate idea of the amount invested, however, could easily be ascertained by classifying the various leagues the number of clubs in each and then placing a value thereon.

DEPENDS UPON CIRCUMSTANCES.

Do you believe organized baseball is justified in blacklisting players who have jumped their contracts?

Answering this question in a general way I would say, no. No player, no matter what league or club he may be a member of, should be blacklisted by any authorized authority, without having been first given a fair and impartial hearing, and then only if the facts in connection with each case would warrant it. As chairman of the national commission I have been somewhat familiar during the past four years with the cases known as "contract-jumpers." In many instances there were extenuating circumstances, and the players were promptly reinstated. In other instances the violation of contracts were so deliberate and malicious, involving in some instances what in other lines of business would be termed criminal actions that no other punishment, in my judgment, could be meted out, in order to protect the honesty of the game and to retain the confidence of all players and patrons, than the permanent ineligibility of the players guilty thereof. In this connection, however, I desire to state that since the adoption of the national agreement cases known as contract-jumpers have been constantly on the decline; in fact, they are seldom heard of now, and as a matter of the records show that during the last two years there has not been a wilful violation of contract, involving a major league player, which, in my judgment, shows conclusively that ball players as a rule are satisfied with existing conditions.

STRENGTH IN UNITY.

Would you consider a league an outlaw league that established or sought to establish teams in cities where other leagues are already settled?

Unless they secured permission as is provided by the national agreement I would so consider it. If this was not the case the whole baseball fabric, in my judgment, would fall. Unless some protection was afforded those who invest their money in this business it would be a difficult proposition to secure investors to the extent that is now required to establish modern baseball plants and maintain them.

Who appoints the club managers—the league—club-owner or league president?

The club-owner, in every instance.

Is it true that a ball player, when he signs his first contract, is virtually at the mercy of the owners, in that he must play for whatever figure is offered him at the expiration of his contract, or whatever he is offered by a club that drafts or purchases him?

That is not true. In the first place, every player, no matter whether in a club of the lowest classification or of the highest, is subject to draft or purchase, this comprising him to advance in his profession, one of the fundamental rules of the commission is that as a basic advances in his profession, that is to say, passes from a club of a lower classification to a higher, his salary must advance with him. On the other hand, if the player is one that possibly cannot advance any higher through experiences of his own, than the league in which he is in, it does not follow that a club-owner can offer him a salary unreasonable or under the average salary in vogue in the particular league of which he is a member. If such things happen, the player has redress to the league of which he is in, it does not follow that the National association or the national commission.

Is there a working agreement betwen the major leagues regarding salaries, management and policy in addition to the national agreement?

There positively is not nor has there been since the adoption of the national agreement. In fact, it is my judgment, and I am quite sure of this proposition that the combined salaries of the sixteen major league clubs is no larger today than it was before the national agreement was adopted.

JOE GANS GIVES SOME GOOD ADVICE.

Always when I look back at my week's stay in Chicago I will have pleasant recollections of the time because of the very cordial manner in which I have been received here. It marked also my first meeting with Packey McFarland, the young man I now unhesitatingly pronounce the real coming champion of the lightweight division, writes Joe Gans in a Chicago paper.

My meeting with McFarland was made all the more pleasant to me because it was the greatest surprise. I had had little idea that Packey was the sort of a boy I found him. This was as great a surprise to me as his fighting ability was a shock. You remember that I bet on Kid Herman against him, and although I received my money back I consider that I was mighty lucky.

I have had several long talks with this young man, and I can say safely that my long experience with men has taught me enough to know that I have this bright boy sized up exactly right. This is why I say unqualifiedly that he is a good lad now and some day well be great among fighters of his class.

My career has been an unusually long one for a fighter. In sports it has been bright, in other extremely dark and gloomy. I do not want at this time to bring up the past, which with the public I hope to forget as far as that is possible. All that I wish to say about the past is to call attention of the public to the fact that it has taught me some bitter lessons.

It has taught me somethings I would like to impart to not only Packey McFarland, but other young men as well, young men who are starting out as he is, with excellent prospects.

Mind you, I do not speak to boxers or athletes alone. I would like to have my words carry to all young men reaching or just past their majority. The lessons I have learned might be of interest, too, to older men.

In my humble opinion the greatest lesson learned from a harsh experience was this:

Choose well your friends. Then stick to them.

What a pity it is, I am told, that I did not heed this earlier in my career. Those are indeed vain regrets. But I am trying my best to make amends at this time. I am decidedly careful in the selection of my companions now.

Life in its most attactive form with a good, solid, honest background and foundation would have been mine now had I had the sense to recognize the so-called straight and narrow path years ago. Yet I have the satisfaction of knowing that if I had not gone through what I did I would not now be the fire-tried man that I am. Never again, is al that I can say.

The time-worn advice about the value of temperance habits I need not impress on Packey McFarland. I can see that he is a young man who is not inclined that way at all. In truth, I am bound to say that one of the big surprises to me in the last two or three years is the constant evidence I have that drinking among young men is going out of fashion.

Truly, it is getting to be a world of sobriety.

The daily papers will tell you that temperance never made greater strides than in the last year. I notice it everywhere I go. There are getting to be fewer and fewer places where the drinking man is tolerated. But I will not dwell on this at length. I never could see the drinking game much anyway.

Perhaps the best way for me to put before The Post' readers what I would few words as briefly as possible. This is what I would like to have all young men try to do.

Learn early the value of money and keep a tight hold on what you have. After all it is the truest friend.

If money is your best friend then gambling is your worst enemy. Nothing will separate you from your coin quicker than games of chance.

Friends that are true friends, stick with them and don't let anybody sway you. A successful man can have all sorts of friends. He must be a man of keen force to separate the brands.

GOOD PRESS AGENT.

Tells How Young Ketchel Stopped Runaway—Same Story.

Scene—Millett's resort near Colma, on a damp, foggy evening. Pugilist Ketchel and his trainers are on the front porch talking fight.

"Aha! what's the noise?" yells Ketchel, as the sound of a fast galloping horse reaches his ears, says The Prince Bulletin.

"A runaway, and there's nobody in the rig," he cries, as he makes a leap for the roadway and starts to head off the frenzied steed.

Now Ketchel was raised on the plains, and is a typical cowboy. He can lasso a bucking broncho or steer in true western fashion, so he thought this was a chance to become a real hero, even if he didn't have a lasso handy.

Just as the horse came tearing by the hotel Ketchel made a frantic grab for the lines and hung on for dear life, trying to check the nag's speed. After he had been dragged several yards the boxer heard a gruff voice, which came from the bed of the wagon, saying: "Watta yona grabba de horsa for? Are yona nutta? I wanta getta home!" And then the dago dozed off again and the plug kept on his journey.

A loud guffaw came sailing from the direction of the porch, which sounded very much like the "horse-laugh," as Ketchel meekly waltzed back to Millett's to brush the dirt off his clothes and nurse his injured feelings.

Instead of a runaway it was a sleepy Italian vegetable vender returning from a hard day's work, and he was taking a nap while his horse was sailing at a fast clip in anticipation of getting a sack of sawdust for a meal. Ketchel will think twice before he attempts to turn "hero" again.

ROWING NEXT THING FOR VARIOUS COLLEGES.

New York, Dec. 10.—Now that the football season is a thing of the past college men about the various college clubs in New York are looking forward to the rowing season next spring. It has developed that following the Army and Navy football game in Philadelphia an informal conference was held by rowing authorities from Pennsylvania, Cornell and Annapolis. The navy men stated that the academy was anxious to extend its participation in rowing events as far as possible and had no idea of dropping out of the Poughkeepsie regatta in spite of the poor showing made by the middies crew last year. Participation in any athletic event away from the academy, however, is dependent on the permission of the navy department. This, it is believed, will be easily obtainable when the time comes. It is expected that the middies will enter a four-oared crew as well as an eight, but it is unlikely that there will be a freshman crew entered.

If you have friends abroad who are interested in Utah Idaho, Wyoming or Nevada, you should send them the Christmas News, to be issued Saturday next. It will be wrapped ready for mailing at the "News" office early Saturday afternoon, and can be sent to any part of the United States, postage included, for 15c; in magazine form, 25c; foreign and Canadian postage extra.

Violent Expulsion of Air Known as Coughing.

At this season of the year, when people are especially subject to coughs and colds, it isn't out of place to know just what it is that causes one to cough, and the action of a cough on the organs involved.

The violent expulsion of air from the lungs, through the mouth, the result of an irritation in the air passages, is what is commonly known as coughing. This in turn irritates the lungs and renders them sore, weakening their natural power of resistance to attack. Several diseases, some of which are often fatal, usually originate in this common ailment.

To stop acough the following mixture has been found most effective. Take a half ounce Virgin Oil of Pine, two ounces of glycerine and a half pint of good whisky. Mix thoroughly and use in teaspoonful doses every four hours. Five ounces of tincture Cinchona compound can be used in place of the whisky with the same effect.

The ingredients are inexpensive and can be purchased without trouble at any good drug store. To avoid substitution of some inferior pine product for the Virgin Oil of Pine, it is better to purchase each separately and mix them at home.

The genuine Virgin Oil of Pine is put up for dispensing, only in ½-ounce vials, each vial securely sealed in a round wooden case with an engraved wrapper showing plainly the name—Virgin Oil of Pine compound pure, guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, Serial No. 451, prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, Ohio. Be sure to get the genuine, as the oil sold in bulk and cheap imitations put out to resemble Virgin Oil of Pine in name and style of package are ineffective, being largely composed of a distillation of pine needles, or leaves, instead of from the pine tree proper.

These pine needle oils are not intended for internal use, and when taken internally usually cause nausea. Their use is mainly confined to the manufacture of soap and similar purposes.

SALT LAKE BOYS IN SIX DAY RACE

Local Riders Are One Lap Behind in the Long Grind.

New York, Dec. 9.—Grinding away around the saucer-shaped track at Madison Square Garden, thirteen of the sixteen teams of bicyclists which started at 1 o'clock this morning in the annual six-day international race, continue on the track, maintaining an average speed of about twenty miles an hours. Six of them are tied for first place, six for second place and one trails two laps of the circuit behind the leaders. The riders are considerably behind the record. Six men dropped out of the race during the day—the Irish-English team, Reynolds and Benyon, because of injuries sustained by Benyon in an early morning spill, and "Bobby" Walthour, "Nat" Butler, D'Arragon and Jacquelin. Walthour claimed that his shoulder, which was injured some time ago in Germany, was giving him trouble; Butler claimed not to be in condition; Darragon injured his knee and Jacquelin's stomach went back on him. Downey, Walthour's team mate, and Downing, with whom Butler was riding, and Breton and Vanoni paired and continued the race.

Throughout the day and night there were the customary sprints by various teams to gain laps and all of them were greeted by the spectators with outbursts of applause. All these, however, were fruitless.

SPILL FOR BARDGETT.

Early in the evening Jacquelin, the Frenchman, sprinted and secured a lead of a third of a lap. Stol of Germany and Bradgett of Buffalo, went after him, but at the Twenty-sixth street side of the track they collided.

Both riders were thrown heavily, Bardgett's head struck the post and he sustained a bad scalp wound. Stol was bruised on his right side. Later Darragon, Sherwood and Fogler fell on the same turn. All except Draggon were injured, but the Frenchman had to quit. The score at the twenty-third hour (midnight, was:

Fogler-Moran, Rutt-Stol, Bedell-Bedell, Georget-Dupre, Logan-Bradgett and Krebs-Vanderstuyft, 453 miles 2 laps; Downing-Downey, Lawson-McDonald, Samuelsen-Mitten, Breton-Vanoni, Wilcox-Williams and Galvin-Wiley, 453 miles 2 laps. Sherwood and Limberg, 453 miles 1 lap.

Late tonight Menus Bedell was taken ill and was forced to leave the track. John Bedell rode on for two hours, when he also left his wheel in order to find, if he could, a partner with whom to team. Under the rules John Bedel has two hours in which to secure a partner.

At 1 o'clock the positions of the riders were unchanged. The leaders had then riden 472 mils 2 laps.

At 2 o'clock this morning the teams were in relatively the same position as at 1 o'clock. The score of the leaders was 489 miles 1 lap. The record for the twenty-fifth hour is 529 miles.

Bedell at that hour had not returned to the track with a team mate.

ADMIRAL EVANS COMPLETING HIS PLANS.

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 9.—Rear Admiral Evans, commanding the Pacific-bound Atlantic fleet now rendezvousing in Hampton Roads, preparatory to the voyage to San Francisco, arrived at Old Point Comfort today from Washington, and boarding his flagship, the Connecticut, immediately began making final arrangements for the departure of the fleet a week from today.

Fourteen of the 16 battleships composing the fleet are now in Hampton Roads, as are also the fleet tender, Yankton, and numerous colliers and supply ships. The last of the vessels to arrive was the Maine.

The battleships are the Louisiana, New Jersey, Virginia, Georgia, Illinois, Alabama, Ohio, Kearsarge, Kansas, Missouri, Connecticut, Vermont, Rhode Island and the Maine. The Minnesota and Kentucky are yet to arrive.

The collier Abarenda has preceded the fleet south with coal. There were scenes of activity about the fleet today. The crews of the many battleships were engaged filling bunkers with "picked" coal while others were engaged in loading supplemental magazine stores sent from the St. Julien's magazine here, these including hundreds of tons of projectiles and other explosives.

"An Object Lesson in Optimism," will be the Christmas News, to be issued Saturday next. It sets forth the story of Utah's greatness, together with the records of Idaho, Nevada and Wyoming for the year 1907 in complete and exhaustive fashion. In spite of present adverse conditions, the record will be a wonderful one.

JAPANESE KILLS WIFE.

Merced, Cal., Dec. 9.—Because his wife would not abandon an immoral life, S. Ide, a Japanese laborer, shot and killed her and cut her throat from ear to ear. He then surrendered himself to the authorities.

ALABAMA GOING DRY.

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 9.—Both Cullman and Walker counties have gone prohibition by large majorities in the elections held today. Returns tonight indicate that Cullman county's majority will be about 800 for prohibition. The result is considered all the more significant, as the county is settled largely by Germans.
