MONEY.

The Bank of England note is about five inches by eight in dimensions, and is printed in black ink on Irish linen water proof paper, colored white and with rugged edges, which looks like the old smoothness of American bank notes.

The notes of the Banque de France are made of white paper, lined printed in blue and black, with numerous mythological and allegorical pictures, and running in denominations from ten francs note to the 1000 franc.

South American currency, in general, is about the size of the American dollar, and is printed in green and blue, except that of the Argentine, which is printed in blue and white. The Argentine and the Spanish and Portuguese languages are the prevailing languages in the South American countries.

The German currency is rather artistic. The bills are printed in green and black upon paper lighter than American paper, and are marked about an inch wider. They run in denominations from 5 marks to 1000 marks. Their lower bills are being printed on the silk fiber paper.

The Chinese paper currency is in red, white and yellow paper, with gilt lettering and gorgeous little hand drawn devices. The bills, to the ordinary observer, might pass for wash checks, but they are worth good money in the Flowery Kingdom.

Italian notes are of all shapes, sizes and colors. The smaller bills — 5 and 10 lire notes — are about the size and shape of our own old 25 cent "shillings". The bills, to the ordinary observer, might pass for wash checks, but they are worth good money in the Flowery Kingdom.

The 100 franc note of Russia is printed from top to bottom with all the colors of the rainbow. It is about the size of our own dollar, and is printed in green and black upon paper lighter than American paper, and are marked about an inch wider. They run in denominations from 5 marks to 1000 marks. Their lower bills are being printed on the silk fiber paper.

The Norwegian have a curious currency, but it is rarely seen in the United States, for the reason that it circulates very little among the common people and the class that comes to America as immigrants. These sticks of their copper and silver coins and about the size of the American dollar, and is printed in green and black upon paper lighter than American paper, and are marked about an inch wider. They run in denominations from 5 marks to 1000 marks. Their lower bills are being printed on the silk fiber paper.

The Austrian bill is printed on light colored thick paper, which shows none of the silk fiber marks or geometric lines used in American currency, as in the case of the German, French and Italian bills. Each bill upon it a terrible warning to counterfeiters, threatening the punishment of imprisonment for any one who attempts to make, sell or have in his possession any counterfeit or falsified bill of this bill.

TAKE MY ADVICE.
The only way to make tea is to pour boiling water on the leaves, stirring them briskly at the same time. It should be served after allowing merely time to settle. The whole operation takes only a minute.

When pillowcases begin to show signs of wear, rip open the end seam, and find so that the side seam will come in the center of the pillow. Sew the end again, and your pillow will wear as long again, as the wear is now upon that part that has had but little wear heretofore.

Tartar Sauce: One tablespoonful of vinegar, one teaspoonful of lemon juice, one spoonful of salt, one table spoonful of Worcestershire sauce and one-half cup of butter, mix vinegar, lemon juice, salt and Worcestershire sauce in a small bowl and heat very hot over hot water, brown the butter in an omelet pan and strain into the other mixture, and use hot for fish.

Almond custard: requires one pint of milk, one teaspoonful of sugar, one-fourth pound of blanched almonds pounded fine, two teaspoonfuls of rose water and the yolk of five eggs. Stir the custard over a slow fire until it is as thick as cream. Pour it into a dish to cool and make a meringue for the top with the whites of the eggs and powdered sugar. — N. Y. Sun.

The most reliable of all window plants are the Dutch tulips, which always bloom, if not allowed to dry up, no matter how hot or dusty the weather. The hyacinths, in fact, are in popular favor. It is seldom troubled with aphids, as is the case with tulips, which should be well guarded against this pest, for it is very hard to keep them off if they once get started. — American Agriculturist.

It must never be forgotten that the mother trains her child as much as by what she is as by what she does. She is the very atmosphere of her child. Over the household mastery, and especially over the work of their needles, they have a companion that grows with their own and helps them into a close intimacy, of which, alas, the mother and daughters of this day know but little. They are really strangers to each other, lamentable in many cases. — Household.

CAVENSE PEPPER.
ITS CURIOUS EFFECT ON CANARIES, FRIGGAS AND OTHER BIRDS.
The following is from the proceedings of the Berlin Physiological Society: Starting with the observed fact that canaries fed with cayenne pepper acquired a ruddy plumage, Dr. Sauerbaum has based upon it a scientific investigation of cayenne, fowls, pigeons and other birds. From these he obtained the following results: Feeding with pepper only produces an effect when given to young birds before they moult; the color of the feathers of older birds cannot be affected. Mature fowls, fed with cayenne, develop a ruddy hue, which is again discharged under the influence of sunlight and cold.

A portion of the constituents of cayenne pepper is quite inactive, as for instance piperin, and serves as a nutritive; similarly the red coloring matter alone of the pepper has no effect on the color of the feathers. It is rather the trio, which occurs in the pepper in large quantities, together with the characteristic pigment which enters into the change of color, by holding the red pigment of the pepper in the solution. Glycyrrhine may be used instead of piperin to bring about the same result.

The same statement holds good with regard to the feeding of the birds with aniline colors. The red pigment of the pepper is also stored in the eggs, yolk as well as in the feathers. The first appearance of pigment in the yolk may be observed as a colored ring four days after the commencement of feeding with the pigment dissolved in fat. After a further two days' feeding the whole yolk is colored. — London Standard.

Times Change.

Trembling albatross (eighteenth century). "Your majesty, I have how got a little scratch on your third test crown." The czar (fourteenth century). "Oh, with his head!" has attended (nineteenth century). "Your majesty, I fell and broke your majesty's magnificent gold and diamond crown all to pieces." Trembling czar. "Oh, is that all I feared from the noise it was another bomb." — New York Weekly.

MIND SUPERSEDES INSTINCT.

HOW MAN HAS LOST MANY INSTINCTS FORGOTTEN BY THE LOWER ANIMALS.

If the doctrine be true that man is really the heir of all the various species and genera of the animal kingdom, it seems a little hard upon us, says the American Analyst, that even by way of exception we inherit some of the most marvellous instincts of these species and genera, and have to be content with those greater but purely human faculties by which even the most wonderful of animal instincts have been somehow extinguished. Sir John Lubbock maintains with a good deal of plausibility, that there are insects, and very likely even higher animals, which are to us insensible. Yet we never hear of a human being that is insensible to the vibrations of the ether which are so slow or so rapid for our ordinary eyes, nor of a human being which is entranced with music that to the majority of our species is absolutely insensible.

As a new power in a human being who could perform the feat, of which we were told only recently, of a woodchuck. In a dark night, he followed up for three miles the trail of a thief with whom the woodchuck could have never been in contact, the last just pursued some miles of land from the tanyard in which the dog was chained up, and finally sat down under the tree in which the man had taken refuge. Why, we wonder, are those human powers for discriminating and following the trail of a thief, but for the sake of the lower animals, which are entirely extinguished in man, if it can be the real heir of all the various species and genera, which are inferior to his own?

We see no trace in animals of that great enjoyment of the flower which is the joy of the flower of the spring. Flowers are great a delight to human beings, and yet men are entirely insensible to the color and odor of the flowers. It is only the power of tracking the path of an odor, which seems to be one of the principal gifts of many quadrupeds and some birds. It is only the power of tracking the path of an odor, which seems to be one of the principal gifts of many quadrupeds and some birds. It is only the power of tracking the path of an odor, which seems to be one of the principal gifts of many quadrupeds and some birds.

Still more enviable is that instinct possessed by many birds of crossing great tracts of land and sea without apparently any landmarks or landmarks to guide them, and of reaching a quarter of the globe which way of them have never visited before, while those who have visited it before have not visited it often enough to learn the shortest way, which, in like circumstances, would be of any use to human intelligence. The migratory birds, which cross the ocean in a position of the feet, as if they were entirely beyond the range of human imagination, and yet no one ever heard of their being lost, is a power of instinct in any number of our race. It may be said, indeed, that some birds are lost, but they are lost in the same manner as some of the military units, though that unfortunate and degrading incident does not appear to have been inherited by any of the higher animals, which intervene between the insects and our own race, but it is only the evidence of our own destiny, if we do, indeed, in any sense inherit from these insect aristocrats one of the most distinct instincts of the aristocrats but inferior creatures which fight so much better than they work. If we have not inherited the instinct of the insects, we have inherited the instinct of the birds, and the power of the dog to track out his home, it is a little odd that we should have inherited the one disastrous instinct of the ant by which it makes itself dependent on a very small and industrious species of its own race, and thereby loses the power to help itself.

What is still more curious is that even where human beings have wholly exceptional and unlearned powers they have to trace of the exceptional and unlearned powers of the races whose vital organization we are said to inherit. The occasional appearance of very rare mathematical powers, for instance, so far from being in any sense explainable from below, looks much more like inheritance from above. The calculating boy who could not even give any account of the process where he arrived at correct results which the mathematician took some time to verify, certainly was not deriving in himself any of the rare powers of the lower tribes of animals. Nor do the prodigies in music which show such marvellous power in infancy recall to us any instinct of the bird, the only musical creature except ourselves. Still less, of course, does great mental genius, the genius of a Howard or a Charles, suggest any reminiscence of what happens in the world of animal life.
