FROM GENOA TO ROME.

Observations in Many Cities by a Correspondent of the News.

Marseilles, Nice, Monte Carlo, Genoa, Milan, Venice, Florence and Pisa and the Wonders of These Cities.

Leaving Genoa, I proceeded on my journey via Nice and Monte Carlo. I passed through Arena on the way. Looking out of the window I saw several Lakes of Lyons. They did not impress me as things they were saying they were. Nice is fine, I would advise any one who is rich to come and stay a week. It has quite a good hotel (not Marseilles). You get the attractiveness around you here and it is very cold. Nice is the place of every rich Turk, Arab, Jew and Egyptian in the harbor, in the carriage Turk using the cushions for a pillow.

Marseilles is a very lively place for its size. There is generally a great deal going on, enough to keep one quite amused. What impressed me more than anything was the old castle. D'if, the old government prison in days gone by, is now or a small island out in the bay, rising from the dangerous rocks, and shows the cells of Dumas' famous story, and the dungeons and also, when where a hook with his name was cut, was given made from a piece of iron hoop, and a small tool made from a piece of table cutlery with which he dug through into after four of years of digging, and he was caught and brought back to the castle and compelled to carry a ball on his prisoner, which he carried for years, and he was released at last from the light of day, which only gave him. Dark cells, which only gave him a little light, and yet he said if all the walls would only talk, how many stories could they tell, how many stories could they would tell for our edification. I saw the underground jail, which is reached by the dungeons of Marseilles. In all the old prisons you see the most interesting thing I have seen.

Old as it may look in Marseilles not yet ended, as Nice, it is quite a place for a month, beautifully situated on the shore of the Mediterranean with some beautiful hotels, and it is quite a place for a great growth of foreign people. It is and accord it, while the place is lived with great wealth, it is not so much as it very pretty. Flowers, green, pineapples, orange, lemons, etc., are to all sides. Everything is so fine, it makes it their favorite resort, and it is being the most fashionable place in the whole world. It is quite a place for the wealthy classes, and I should think it would be a place for the invalids of from the one side it is a paradise and on the other side it is a place for a man to go to live in these days. It is quite a place for a man to go to live in these days. It is quite a place for a man to go to live in these days. It is quite
