A Buried Indian Camp.

A Buried Indian Camp.

Mr. Kinney, of Owinza, about nineteen miles east of Shoshone, was in town recently, and gave us an account of the discovery made by himself and others just south of that station. Some four years ago he found holes in the ground while hunting, and supposed they were coyote holes. He then dug down about six feet, and found more or less water in the sand, but paid little attention to it. During the past two weeks Mr. Kinney has had one or two men sinking a shaft to prospect this singular freak in the great Snake River lava plains. About seven lectfrom the surface considerable water was found, and at the depth of some twelve feet there was found a layer of sagebrush, covered with loose lava rock, imhedded in the sand and lying on top of a bed of blacker. The rocks ware smooth and at the depth of some twelve feet there was found a layer of sagebrush, covered with loose lava rock, imbedded in the sand and lying on top of a bed of blue clay. The rocks were smooth and rounded by the action of water, and apparently were from a stream, although it is about thirty miles to make River. While excavating the first few feet Indian relics were found, consisting of arrow heads, charcoal, etc. The sagebrush evidently had been lying there for balf a century or more, was soaked heavy with water, and of a very black appearance. Capt. Rice, who worked in this ground for Mr. Kinney, is an old prospector, and thinks that the indications are favorable for coal, and that if a shaft were sunk to any considerable depth a flowing well or stream of water would be opened in the midst of this desert plain. If such would be the case a stream of water would be of untold value, as the Snake River plains are from lifty to seventy-dive miles wide, and between American Falls and Glenn's Ferry 100,000 head of horses would thive it there were only a general supply of water. The theory has been here that underground rivers and large reservoirs of water exist, and some talk has been heard of organizing a stock company at Shoshone to slak artesian wells across in the desert, or to get Congress to appropriate a sum for reclaiming these fertile and valuable plains. This discovery of water on an elevated plateau, or ridge, may become of great commercial value to the section of Idaho, and should be fully explored and a shaft sunk to sufficient depth to determine all the facts. The location was apparently an ancient Indian camp, but has heen filled up and covered over by the drifting sand.—Shoshone Journal.

"Quite a serious accident occurred here today, through the careless handling of fire arms. The details are as follows: Henry Jaconson, a lad about seventeen years of age, in company with his mother, and his brothers and sisters, was out gathering berries, hunting and fishing, when young Henry saw a flock of prairie chickens. In his excitement to get his gun, which was laying on the wagon seat with a quilt over it, he pulled the gun out in such a manner that the trigger came in contact with the quilt thereby discharging the gun, the contents of which went through the muscle of his right arm.
