MRS. EMMA P. EWING.

The Talented and Clever Expounder of Household Science.

For the past two weeks the News has been noticing the lectures on cookery given in Unity hall by Mrs. Ewing, and so much enthusiasm has been aroused among the members of her class that the organization of a school of domestic science in this city is already being discussed. The kitchen and the culinary art have been so thoroughly, systematically and charmingly treated as to raise that much-neglected department of woman's work several degrees higher in the estimation of most people, and make it appear a most delightful occupation. It is often said that cooks like poets are born not made, and while in a sense this may be true, some women have more tact and taste for household work than others. Still all women who have homes to manage must want to preserve some knowledge of home work and perhaps those who are engaged in household management might profit most from the study of Mrs. Ewing's methods.

Having noted the great interest these lectures have created in Salt Lake, it has been thought that perhaps the readers of the News would also be interested in the public career of the talented lecturer. Mrs. Ewing is just above medium height, of plump form, with a pleasant, easy manner which charms and causes one to feel instantly at home in her presence. Having traveled in all parts of her country and remained long enough to learn the manners and customs of the different sections and adapt herself to them, she is a true American in every sense the latest inspire, not a disinterested northern, eastern, southern or western woman. Indeed, it would be impossible to function manner or accent in which her children so is usually done with some people. She was born in New York state and the earlier part of her life was spent on her father's farm. After marrying, however, she lived in Maryland, where people she very much admires and from whom she learned a great deal about cookery, in fact she claims that the people of Maryland can cook everything, especially things that are native. In her early married life Mrs. Ewing felt the necessity of better methods of cooking and for the benefit of her own family began the study as a science. Persevering, even from so limited an experiment as her own household work, the great benefit derived from a scientific preparation of food, she desired to spread her knowledge, that all might profit thereby, and to this end published a book entitled "Cooking and Castle Building," which ran through several editions. As she studied and experimented, the interest in her work so much alarmed her that she decided to make it a lifework, for she perceived the great necessity of combining the intellect with the hand in housework. With so many things, and a new and interesting field of labor for her we opinion before her. The idea of making science and training women for home work soon possessed her, and she saw no time in putting her ideas into practice. She moved to Chicago, believing that as enterprising and rapidly growing western city was the best place for new ideas. In this she was not mistaken; for though almost a stranger, she met with success at once. Having opened a private school for cookery, she soon had some of the best known ladies in Chicago taking a great interest in her work, among them the admirable Mrs. Henrotin, whose labors in connection with the World's Fair have caused her name to be widely known.

No doubt out of this private school grew the National Household Economic Association of Chicago. In less than two years this school was larger than Mrs. Ewing could attend to without help, and she soon perceived the necessity of training teachers. But in order to do so properly she felt they must have a knowledge of botany, physiology and chemistry. While pondering a way and means for a training school, imagine her satisfaction when the Iowa State Agricultural College offered her a professorship in household science, if she would take charge of such a school in connection with the college. Tact, of course, solved the question for her, and was just what she wanted. Though the salary was not nearly equal to the receipts from the school in Chicago, she accepted the offer and was made a member of the faculty in the Iowa College, while the course of Domestic Economy was made one of the departments of the institution. After the school had been in operation a year the board, in conjunction with Mrs. Ewing, organized a post-graduate study in household science on a year's course, granted the degree of master of domestic science. Mrs. Ewing remained until after the granting of two degrees; she then felt her work there finished, and accepted a similar position at Purdue university, Lafayette, Indiana.

Mrs. Ewing points to the fact that the West was the first to open schools of domestic science and had them in perfect working order before the eastern cities had taken up the idea at all, though now it is a very interesting question in the East, especially in the large cities and there are at present some very noted schools of this character, for instance Pratt Institute, New York, Drexel University, Philadelphia, and the Bryn Mawr schools for young women.

After thoroughly establishing the school at Lafayette, Mrs. Ewing moved to Kansas City also to take charge of a school in domestic science. Her summers for the past eleven years have been spent at Chautauqua where she has charge of the cooking school and lectures frequently on her favorite topic. Her lectures are among the regular course in the assembly given in the hall of Palladio, and are published in the Assembly Herald. Two of them, entitled respectively, "The Musical Look in the Food Question," and "The Greatest Need of the Nineteenth Century," have called forth considerable discussion. The greatest need of course she thinks to be a properly equipped training school in household science—at present there is no such institution in the land; but she hopes soon to see one in every state and believes Congress ought to be persuaded to do something towards the founding of such an institution.

Pleasant are Mrs. Ewing's associations with the Chautauqua assembly and she declines many offers of summer visits and lecture tours, and only was the reason she refused to give the daily lesson in household science from June to October at the World's Fair, but she did give a three weeks' course in corn cooking in the Iowa Corn Palace, where the members of the state board daily partook of the delicacies they so much relished. After the course they showed their appreciation by presenting Mrs. Ewing with a very handsome gold medal, on which she always wears—her name is on one side engraved on the medal, "Queen of the Corn Bake." Mrs. Ewing also managed the furnishing of South Hall in the Iowa state building for the household science department and earned the best set of furnishings light, easy and comfortable to use as to be perfectly hygienic and economic labor and material, that work in every department may be made easy for the homemaker and become a pleasure rather than a task.

She is certainly a necessary to her line of work and her converts ought to be innumerable. One young woman of Salt Lake is already contemplating a course at Pratt institute with the summer at Chautauqua for the purpose of becoming a teacher in her own city.

Mr. Ewing accompanies his wife on this western tour, and is in perfect sympathy with her work. He is a quiet, dignified gentleman, a lawyer by profession, broad-minded and liberal in his views and very observant of people and places, helping his wife greatly in their extensive tours. From here Mr. and Mrs. Ewing expect to go to Sacramento where a course of lectures similar to those given in Salt Lake will be delivered. The winter will be spent in the delightful little city of Santa Cruz.

Steele Set at Liberty.

Chief Justice Merritt has issued an order for the release from the penitentiary of Charles Steele, one of the new and grave men, who was committed on September 5th to await the action of the grand jury on a charge of having "some thing" counterfeit coins in his possession. The defendant was then released on motion of the district attorney, who had arrived at the opinion that Steele could not be convicted, as there was no evidence that he had the coins in his possession for the purpose of circulating them. Hence the grand jury were not asked to indict.

STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

An Interesting Address by Abraham H. Cannon—Other Features of the Program.

The following is the program of the regular session of the students' society held last night, Nov. 23:

The society was first favored with a song by Miss Eva Musser, and then with a selection by a male quartette, consisting of Messrs. Foster, Midgely, Sears and Hill.

Next was a lecture by Abraham H. Cannon who spoke of the aims and ideals we should have in order to aspire to success. He said: "You, my young friends, are standing upon the threshold of a great life and it is for you to determine at the moment what life shall be. You should already have fixed your aims in life and be steadily working toward the mark you have set. If you are capable of being a first-class something you have a right to be a second-rate something. Whatever the trade or profession you have chosen it should be pursued constantly in order to obtain the highest excellence in that line. Never be satisfied with anything but the best. A great fault with young people is, that they do not make right selections. We find here, there and everywhere women of men and women who started out in life wrong. They have made mistakes in the beginning of their career and have failed in which they undertook. I admire very much indeed the young man or woman who has made a choice, and follows it regardless of the applause of friends or foes. The boy or girl to whom who does not perhaps stand at the head of the class, but studies just as diligently, is just as much worthy our praise and regard as those who seemingly possess more brilliant talents. I urge you to never regard even the brightest student, for who knows but, under the ragged garment, the refulgent exterior, there may be a most precious gem, and on from our eyes, one which may hereafter exercise a wonderful influence in the affairs of men. It frequently happens that those who are said to attend develop into the greatest men and women.

Some of us are fitted for one thing and some for another. Some are so built that they must move quickly, and others must move quite slow and even at times. God has not left any of us without a talent, and it is our duty to discover what that talent is. Children often give evidence of certain inclinations to the arts, trades or professions. These are the whisperings to the parents of that for which their children are most qualified. You will find that one child wants to play with brushes and to draw. Is not that a talent of the painter? Another never delights in the use of tools. When these talents are manifested we should devote them to the end in so to prepare him for the greatest possible usefulness.

A old man was reading his Bible one day and happened to turn to a place where the letters G. F. C. occurred. This worried him for he did not know how the letters came there, and he took it as an inspiration and came to the conclusion that it meant, Go Forth Christ. This he did, but after three months he had driven the people from him and had made a failure of preaching. Then he decided that the letters meant Go Plant Corn, and this he did with success. It was then he realized he was best adapted. Young people should not scatter their talents over a wide field that they will not make a success of anything, but must they be too narrow in their work either. We should know something of everything and everything of something.

This should be the education which we should strive to acquire. He thoroughly to that which engages your attention, treating no labor a duty, however humble, indifferently or carelessly. He concluded his remarks with an appeal to students to keep themselves free from everything that is sinful and to remain in such a condition that the Spirit of God can direct us in all our labors, operating upon our minds for our instruction and exaltation.

This closed the exercises for the evening. There being a holiday next week, no session will be held for two weeks.

Corresponding secretary.

Sunday School Notice.

Stake Sunday school missionaries and the superintendents of the first thirteen city wards Sunday schools will please remember their appointments for Sunday, Nov. 25th, as published in last Tuesday evening's News, or refer to S. S. appointment book to be found at Parton & Co's, 44-47 south Main street.

The officers in charge of each city ward Sunday school will please see that their several schools are fully prepared to repeat the Articles of Faith at our Stake S. S. conference, to be held December 9th. A portion of the time at the intervening Sundays, or at some other day, should be devoted to rehearsing them by classes and in concert.

At the morning session of our conference the officers and members of all the city Sunday schools are requested to attend in a body, coming from their several schools in that manner to the Tabernacle. The officers of the other schools of the Stake while contributing their sections as usual will please be present at the conference in person or attorney to have their schools properly represented.

Prevent Even Distresses will conduct the musical exercises, and will meet all over 15 years of age for rehearsal at the Assembly Hall on Friday evening, Dec. 7th, at 7:30, and all under 15 years of age at the same place on Saturday Dec 8th, at 2:30 p.m.

All are requested to bring with them copies of the Deseret Sunday School song book.

About Croup.

Croup is a terror to young mothers. To put them concerning the first symptoms and treatment is the object of this item. The first indication of croup is hoarseness. In a child who is subject to croup it may be taken as a sure sign of the approach of an attack. Following the hoarseness is a peculiar croupy cough. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even after the croupy cough has appeared it will prevent the attack. It has never been known to fail.

Mrs. W. J. Fabey, of Le Roy, N. Y., says: "I have tried fifty cough cures. Parker's Cough Syrup is the only one that helps me. I know it is the best cough remedy." For sale by F. J. Hill & Co., and Nelden Judson Drug Co. 1
