BOTH HOUSES BUSY.

Numerous Bills and Memorials Introduced in Each House.

SHINE RIVALRY OVER STATEHOOD.

Standing Committees. — Powers and Allen Enliven Proceedings in the House.

Yesterday a marked disposition was shown in both houses of the Legislature to rush business. In fact, such a disposition was carried to the verge of rapacious. In the Council the presiding officer distinguished himself by introducing a bunch of four bills the subjects of which will be seen in the matter report. Taylor, of the Council, made a response to the demands of labor by introducing a bill for an eight hour law, and Allen, of the House, did the same thing. Those two legislators legislate to appear to have an eye to the labor vote.

The Council which in formal session has generally been for cutting the House in the matter of bills introduced, is forging ahead of the lower and more numerous body of statesmen at this session. But the members of the upper house, except on this ground, claim to be showing a more earnest desire for the entire injection of our commonwealth into evil than are the representatives, for it was the latter who are trying to make of Utah a Utopia by means of law, they can by means of memorials to Congress. The House committee on immigration has already been supplied with a pamphlet gratis of desirable in their line, which they are expected to summer and mature at the earliest practicable date, that the same may be forwarded to Washington.

The original passage with which these prayers for the national lawmakers abound are, as Powers extemporaneously remarked, in the House yesterday, appealed to the improved upon as much as possible by the committee.

The rivalry between the committees of the respective sides in the House, in the effort to capture the greatest number of credit for securing the admission of Utah into the Union, has been a marked feature of the session thus. After the legislatively inspired Powers with having been elected on an independent platform, and of having gone back on it, and now as Owen Varian has made a similar estimation, but Powers is as ready for reply, and charges the Republicans with pretending to favor statehood while delaying action in committee thereby.

Yesterday, twice at St. George gave evidence of possessing no amount of practical commonsense, when an hour of a windy debate between Varian, Allen and Powers, by sitting to a point to either, within the door resulted.

A bill in the convention carried shortly before adjournment, when Neisser the Democratic candidate for speaker, took advantage of by distributing a copy of the Press Reporter and remarking: "Mr. Speaker, I find on my desk a copy of the Press Reporter. I move that it be printed in lieu of minutes of convention."

There was a laugh, when Allen said: "Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman's motion be laid on the table where the Democratic party was laid on Election day."

With this formality the Speaker stated the question and called for the vote. The result was the same party vote in favor of Allen, between whom and the statehood from the north counties were one and to be easy.
