GIVE THANKS UNTO THE LORD.

Inasmuch as President McKINLEY has issued a proclamation requesting that the people of the United States, when next they gather in their congregations to worship the Lord, take special occasion to thank Him for the success that has attended the nation's arms, and, in all humility, to ask His face for continued guidance and protection;

Therefore, we, being in hearty accord with the purpose and spirit of the President's proclamation, take pleasure in directing the attention of the presiding officers and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints thereto, and in so doing express the hope that his request may be graciously and heartily complied with in all the congregations of the Saints when they meet for public worship on Sunday next, 10th inst.

THE MARCH OF EMPIRE.

The islands of Hawaii are practically a part and parcel of the great Federal Republic of the Western Hemisphere. All that remains to complete the union is altogether technical and formal, leaving the acceptance of such action by the Hawaiian legislature, as this body is being held in session for that very purpose, the hoisting of the Stars and Stripes over the government building at Honolulu awaits the reception of the congressional document rather than anything more formal.

This is a consummation that has been striven for for half a century. Hawaii is one of our natural outposts and being nearer to our territory than to any other in the world, it was the proper thing for the islands to fall to us when they fell anywhere, as they must in the very nature of things have done in a short time whether expressed or not. All question regarding their disposition being now at rest and the Bostwick group being attached to the United States, the work of assimilation must be begun in earnest and pushed along as rapidly as circumstances will permit, the powerful influence in this direction must be exercised in this direction must be a public this will probably receive immediate attention and be pushed to rapid completion.

No arrangement regarding the political status of the islands has been made, that involve things more essential as they are but without jurisdiction or sovereignty. The United States being the owner of the group and all things relating thereto, can alone confer the necessary power to make and execute public regulations. Doubtless this will receive immediate attention when congregation being completed, but in the absence of immediate communication it looks as though there might be a brief interregnum which, however, a provisional government consisting of the personnel of the previous one might bridge over.

As the islands are now at last, despite the opposition at home and abroad, opposition which has in places and at times amounted to rancor and bristled with threats, the dusky domain of the mid-Pacific begins securely under the powerful wing of the great land of freedom. It means another advantage to us and unmistakable benefits to the islands, who will be made assignable citizens in good time. The marvelous productive power of the islands will enable such as be inclined to add to our honor achievements in that line, and parents indeed, while increased trade and the steady influx of settlers from this side the water will materially work out a transformation better the new generation readily adapts itself. The benefits to accrue to our wheat and flour merchants will be very great, as the islands are to be a ready market for the product, and such a situation is important to the commercial and industrial interests of the Pacific coast as has not been created since the war, which with their accompanying train of remarks of regret would be in the United States the date of "the war." Let thick of it. Less than three months ago the United States did not possess a foot of ground to enter the Pacific and now it is the Pacific and Hawaii belonging and the Philippines stretching out in a nearly line toward the shore, and still greater prospects seem as if to be on the other way. Our impression is whatever the people may want, it is still the fact of fate, the unfolding of a supreme design, the resistless march of the power of destiny, the equivalent for God, while in the great of humanity. It is in the which the fact of the time and in the time, the world and its of men, not in whose keeping is the sidling hand is so powerful as a factor in the path of a nation's destiny.

HOBSON'S RELEASED.

A further of journal news we regrade the American people on being informed that Hobson and his comrades are safe within the lines of their friends. The exchange was effected yesterday afternoon, and when the men reached Havana they were found to be with their escapers quite well and seemingly unfatigued.

The story of the released men is a good reads more like a cleverly worked up chapter of a highly sensational novel than a matter-of-fact narrative. Perhaps the same kind of thing would answer here and there and it is a safe proposition that it is not the thing to do again. The Cubans are very sharp to see that an attempt to duplicate the performance would have a much less gratifying finish so far as the Spaniards and they would be a happy from feet to top if they could get hold of the men. The feat was not without the elements of adventure, which often when just out because of the heartbreaking toil which it proposes to the shrewd, but slacker than the world would be considerably impressed, and the thing gives the venture some kind of a popularity increased.

It does not matter as to what may be accomplished in the way of sentiment regards to the American cause. The fellows that signed on comparatively few in the beginning, and who stuck to the end of the American cause and conquered, the sickness, hardship and danger, the sunshine, fortune is fine and for appreciation as any one of the heroes of Santiago. This the heroes of this expedition happened to fall to Hobson is merely sentiment. Undoubtedly any thing in the world have been equally as well and have done the same as well although there is no disparagement of Hobson or that or any other account. He is one of the gallant fellows who have with him. Such is carried to the million and prominence, and deservedly so, for he is a brave, discovering hero to all and a hearty welcome.

A LOSING EVENT.

A musical event of considerable importance is to take place in this city in October next. The national Eisteddfod will be held, and as an additional attraction the presence of an attaché above in the person of Dr. Joseph Parry (Mabon) will be present and officiate. During his very brief stay he will endeavor to effect a union of all the religious choirs and singing societies in a camp or festival to be held by himself. This would undoubtedly be one of the most attractive things in that or in fact any other country outside of the great West and would not fail to be immensely popular. The dear old composer quoted a chorus of 1,000 voices at Crystal Palace, London, and is admirable the about one in that line in existence. He is also an excellent and a voluminous composer, both the author of more sweet songs than any other man in any part of the world.

Utah is sure to be far in the matter of appreciation and patronage of the musical art, and the most classical there is to be had will not lack of appreciation for want of technical center for the assembled lovers of the simple and the magnificent in music. The event will be an event to be remembered.

HOBSON'S EXPLOIT.

It will be gratifying to the people of the United States to learn that Lieutenant Hobson and the brave heroes who voluntarily entered into the Merrimac have been exchanged and consequently are now at liberty.

The history of their deed of heroism is now before the world. At most so it seems because that the Spanish satrap, Cervera, had entered Santiago harbor. It was supposed that he would endeavor to escape during the course of night whenever he had enough coal to undertake another voyage. To enter the Cervera channel and open fire upon the Spanish vessels there was to take great risks, owing to the minor cook and to the shore batteries. To Admiral Sampson it therefore appeared that the entrance of the harbor by some enterprise would be most desirable, as by that means the Merrimac would be made, effect notwithstanding fogs and dark nights. Then Lieutenant Hobson proposed a plan for the sinking of the Merrimac in the channel—a plan that was accepted and carried out in all its details.

It was a remarkable expedition. It would almost certainly death to the seven men who engaged in it. It seems evident that our country has the men needed for any emergency. Hobson is a typical American. Twelve more men drew to the first cause to follow him, and there are thousands throughout the country who would readily respond to a call for a mission of that kind. It was, however, a mission to save life to eventually prevent the Spaniards under Admiral Cervera from taking a further part in the war. He is perhaps for the liberation of Cuba can soon be overestimated. As soon as the Spanish squadron had a possession of Santiago harbor the insurgent commanders were unable to effect a definite plan of operations. There was always a menace to our coast cities and the possibility of sending Spanish fleets against Admiral Sampson. The Merrimac of the Merrimac at the right time and place, Hobson and his men, and a like number of Spanish officers.

Perhaps these Spanish prisoners who captured and tried to sink the United States auxiliary cruiser Harvard are now thoroughly acquainted with the fact that the mettle of American seamen is always ready and ever, ever prepared.

Now the Spaniards have tried another a cork in the Santiago bottle. For the sake of the American battleship Merrimac and the Times should the work, and the Hobson Merrimac the or Hobson shore.

It seems that after all the Spanish warships will rather will pay a visit to the New England coast. For it is not so the Spaniards contrived to make public air.

Those newspaper correspondents who have been so free and frisky with their matter of sending Spanish prisoners, are not said a word to the sending Spanish officers on the subject.

Both Spanish officers are desirous to capture and relieving the Americans of some for prisoners. This indicates a consideration in the city which is upon an equal footing.

It is not improbable that the guns of Admiral Sampson's fleet are in action today, and that interesting news from the entrance to Santiago harbor is due at hand.

The "Hobs" is not sacred cut if he side now at the prospect of Admiral Cervera getting Sierra Redondo.
