WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—The Senate entered upon its final session today with prospect of sitting continuously until Monday noon. There is a rush of private bills, as this was the last chance of many eager claimants.

Under a protest all here the case investigated at once. Call sent the committee on foreign relations to communicate publicly with the state department on a view to American intervention.

The action was taken confirming the unanimous agreement on the Hawaiian appropriation bill.

Morgan, in charge of the naval appropriation bill, cut it down the fact of pending bills, by striking the seed of a very considerable of this, the last of the great appropriation bills. He also presented and the naval bill was taken up. As proposed by the committee the number of extra seamen to be raised by the secretary of the navy in time of emergency was reduced from 7,500 to 1,000. Lodge (Mass.) strenuously opposed the reduction.

ENGLAND AND BIMETALLISM

No Change in the Monetary System of the Country Wanted.

Liberal and Conservative United on a Single Standard—United States Must Lead.

NEW YORK, March 2.—A special cable to the Herald from London says:

Days in Manchester, where the bimetallic feeling is strong, the action of the chamber of the other day has evoked the comment in the English papers, as in both conservative and liberal papers in London the time is not ripe for agitation any change in the monetary system, or indeed any change in England's attitude if Germany calls an international conference in the form that was made last at Brussels.

In the liberal ranks some of the papers express doubt on the point and if the present government remains in power it is the idea of sending delegates there in accordance with instructions to convince Britain. In no action in bimetallism which could alter her present single standard.

Although Mr. Balfour is so strongly a bimetallist and is quite certain to be made chief of the conservative party in the house, he has pledged himself that no change will be made in the present system on the subject shall come before the public notice. Both conservatives and liberals are still confident that the United States will lead.

PATRIOTIC MME. MODJESKA

The Polish Actress the Object of the Wrath of the Czar

On Account of an Address Before the World's Congress of Representative Women.

CHICAGO, March 2.—The cable announcement that Mme. Modjeska had been prohibited by the Russian government to appear at the Warsaw theatre because of the lecture on the opportunity of the Poles during the World's Fair, was not a surprise to Helena Modjeska, one of the well known actresses, who lives in this city. In a letter received by him last Wednesday, Mme. Modjeska wrote:

"The Russian government is forbidding me to play in Poland. I cannot tell you how this happened. When I was in Poland a proposition was made to me to give a performance in Kalisch as a benefit for Polish poor sufferers. On the day before the performance was to have been given the manager of the theatre was notified that the police had orders to prohibit my appearance. Now this only serves to make me more determined than ever to go to Warsaw that and there plan for a performance there. In regard to Kalisch it could be said that the prohibition was the act of the local police. In Warsaw a prohibition must be imposed from the governor, and must be carried out by the governor. Yours was more bitter and extreme against our people than in the present governor, Sobolewski, and if Sobolewski prohibits me in Warsaw it will be plain that the act is really the act of the czar."

The silence that brought down upon Mme. Modjeska the wrath of Russia's Czar was delivered in this city before the World's Congress of Representative Women on the evening of May 19, 1893. Her topic was "Polish Women," she said in part:

"There would be a greater number of Polish women here and entitled to be here to speak for Poland but for the Russian government. There would be more documents here from Polish women but for the severity of the exile of the Russian government. The Polish women retain a strong feeling of nationality—the love and hope for the restoration of national power.

"We have had a constant struggle for independence. Anybody who knows us knows we crave our country, full of its free institutions and energy its free government. The poles have gained. Now they labored for land, but her heart was always fixed on the gains of their country. It was one who preserved patriotism and honor in spite of others and, which is worse, the ban, to the enslaving degrees of the Russian government.

"Our sovereign has great mistake if they think they have discovered us. As long as a Polish woman lives Poland will live. We may have mentioned the fate of our brother, Gen. Kosciusko. May we have the Polish mother is waiting patiently for the resurrection, and if there is justice on earth she will not wait in vain."

Only One Marriage Ceremony.

NEW YORK, March 2.—There will be but one marriage ceremony at the wedding of Miss Anna Gould and Count Boniface de Castellane. That ceremony will be performed by Archbishop Corrigan. The reason why there will be no civil ceremony is that no civil ceremony is necessary. The French law, contrary to the general impression, recognizes as valid a marriage contracted in a foreign country in conformity with the laws of that country.
