Poultry Exhibition.

The annual exhibition of the Utah Poultry Association will be held in this city, in the Herald block, beginning on Wednesday and ending on Friday of next week. The management is endeavoring to make the display the best ever seen in this Territory. Poultry breeders from all parts of the Territory are expected to be present with a choice collection of fowls. A large number of valuable prizes are offered, consisting of cash premiums, gold, silver and bronze medals. One of the features of the fair will be the exhibition of an improved incubator in which the process of hatching can be seen from day to day.

Ward Reorganized.

B. W. Driggs writes to the DESERET NEWS from Pleasant Grove, as follows under date December 6th:

President Joseph F. Smith and President A. O. Smoot and his Counselors met with the Saints of Pleasant Grove today and reorganized the ward by appointing Joseph E. Thorne Bishop, with Alexander Bullock and Charles D. Warnock as his Counselors. Bishop John Brown who had served as presiding officer of the ward for twenty-nine years was compelled to ask the Presidency of the Stake to accept his resignation on account of failing health. Brother Brown was tendered a unanimous vote of thanks for his past labors, and retires from his office with the full confidence of the people over whom he has presided.

Thanks Expressed.

The following resolutions were received by the DESERET NEWS today from Secretary H. M. Wells, of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Association. They were neatly lithographed and framed:

Resolved, That the Board of Directors of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing Society, hereby publicly express the thanks of the Society to the citizens of Utah Territory for their generous patronage of the Territorial Fair of 1891, and in a special manner to extend thanks for the awarding committees for their arduous and important labors performed without compensation, to the donors of special premiums for their public spirit and encouragement in a worthy enterprise, to the editors of the Gazette of Utah for continuous and kind support, to the Hon. the Mayor and City Council of Salt Lake City for valued favors, to the Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce and the Salt Lake Stock Exchange for energetic and valuable assistance in the mining exhibit, to Judge Bartch, Hon. R. Eldridge, and others for their efficient services, to Professor Sackett, not only for his own important and interesting services, but for the interesting and excellent exhibits from the Logan Agricultural College and, last, but not least, to the press of the Territory for their valuable help, columns of space, continuous treatment, and intelligent advocacy of the Fair.

H. W. LAWRENCE, President.
H. M. WELLS, Secretary.

MOONLIGHT ON THE LAKE.

In the autumnal glimmer and cool chill,
The moonlight comes in silent and sweet hue
Through some tall mountain, dusky pine and cliff
And with its mellow mantle mixed cliff and sky
The poet's last good night fell silver and shrill
Ere it was fully known with dying day.
When comes upon the heather for away,
The chasm of moonlight over the distant hill.

Like fairy that flashes through the cottage door
A full moon climbed above the eastern line—
The hidden soul that would become of more
They whispered to the moon that awoke,
Although the lake a golden ripple broke,
And the green knoll lay ruddily overshadowed.
—J. G. F. Nicholson in Chambers Journal.

In a Street Car.

There was a typical bit of life shown in a recent incident in a Brooklyn street car. Two fashionably dressed women strangers to each other, and each with a child on her lap, found themselves seatmates in a crowded car. The handsome blue eyed boy on one knee was all a victim to the opposite of the dainty little maiden with golden curls and soft brown eyes on the other, and to the mutual satisfaction of the parents a pretty little flirtation went on.

Twitter up from one to the other side a plump, rosy cheeked mite of two years, a comfortably clad but evidently poor child, stood against her mother and admiringly watched the pair. At a certain moment the mother of the boy signaled to stop. "Kiss the baby," she said, as she stood the little fellow on his feet, meaning of course Miss Golden Eyes, and he turned to obey.

At that moment, however, the other little girl, making her way out with her mother, was exactly abreast of him, and Master Blue Eyes, finding this little face before him, promptly bestowed a smacking, hearty smack upon it. And every body smiled, while the prince was lifted out, the beggar maid wonderingly went her way, and the disappointed princess, who had leaned forward for the royal salute, hurled her fate in her mother's cloak, learning thus early in life the bitter truth that the kiss is not always for the one who expects it.—Her Point of View in New York Times.

Buried Cities of New Mexico.

"New Mexico and Arizona offer as great a field for archæologists as the Old lands where the dawn of history and dark disappears," said W. P. Metcalf, of Albuquerque, N. M. "An expedition left Albuquerque only a few days ago to look for treasures which traditions say is to be found in Grant County, 300 miles from that city. Before the pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock there were flourishing settlements of white men along the Rio Grande. Coronado, in his history of his expedition to Cibola in such as 1540, wrote of the seven cities of Cibola, describing them as of fabulous wealth and magnificent beauty. The cities at Gran Quivera are believed to be the ruins of some of those cities.

"Coronado told of abundant gold and treasures in all of these cities, and many expeditions have explored about Quivera. The ruins indicate that a large city stood there. The discovery would work out the story of palaces, magnificent cities and churches. A curious thing is that no water can be found for fifty miles around the site of the old city, although treasure searchers have honeycombed the land trying to secure the water. No treasure has ever been found there, but the belief that it is buried there antedates any traditions of the Mexicans or Indians. Just what prospects indicated the last expedition to start out I do not know."—Chicago Tribune.

Chicago's Highest Buildings.

The highest building in Chicago at present and one which is not built on the new Chicago construction system is the Auditorium. Its tallest point is 268 feet above the sidewalk. The Fair building, now almost completed to one section, measures 241 feet to the coping, and it is possible that it will be carried upward to sixteen or eighteen stories. The new Masonic temple will measure, very all, 274 feet. This is constructed entirely on the new system. The Ashland block measures 216 feet to the coping; the Woman's temple, whose upper stories are now being finished, towers 200 feet from the ground; the Manhattan, 196 feet; the Monadnock, 195; the Rookery and Rand block, 192; the Monadnock building, 180; the Chamber of Commerce block, 180; the Home Insurance, 179; the Tacoma, 175; the Northern hotel, 174; the Rookery, 164; the Orange block, 161; the Rand-McNally, 148; the Chicago Opera house, 135, and the L. Z. Leiter building, 123 feet.—Harper's Weekly.

There was in London a few years ago a lady who had the most intense abhorrence of white leaf sugar. Did she happen to come into contact with that innocent article, or even even a lump of it brought into her presence, she would be seized with a violent paroxysm of rage.

A sagacious dog, which had been confined for a week in a barn near Gibson, made his escape finally by climbing the weather boarding a distance of fifteen feet and then jumping to the ground.

"August Flower"

Mr. Lorenzo F. Sleeper is very well known to the citizens of Appleton, Me., and neighborhood. He says: "Eight years ago I was taken sick, and suffered so no one but a dyspeptic can. I then began taking August Flower. At that time "I was a great sufferer. Everything I ate distressed me so that I "had to throw it up. Then in a "few moments that horrid distress "would come on and I would have "to eat and suffer "again. I took a "little of your medicine, and felt much "better, and after "taking a little more "August Flower my "Dyspepsia disappeared, and since that time I "have never had the first sign of it. "I can eat anything without the least fear of distress. I wish all "that are afflicted with that terrible "disease or the troubles caused by "it would try August Flower, as I "am satisfied there is no medicine "equal to it."

For that Horrid Stomach Feeling.

Queer Gold Bug Tales.

Joseph Brown, who works in the lumber woods near Gadsden, Pa., came into town and got William Squires to go with him to Bald Hill to help him gather the stores from a tree line he said he had discovered on his way in from the woods.

"I heard the bees humming in the tree while I was five rods away from it," Brown said, "or I wouldn't have discovered it."

He took them with them three patent pails to hold the honey, an ax to cut the tree down, and a box of sulphur to burn in the hollow for the purpose of smoothing the bees. Brown led the way to the place where the gold and bees had humming. The tree was hit with the ax and the humming struck up immediately and so loud as to startle the few men. They found near the bottom of the trunk a hole where the occupants of the tree had made their entrance and the sulphur fire was started there, and the stinging bees went up into the hollow tree. For a time the humming made was awful, but it gradually grew fainter and fainter as the sulphur had its deadly effect and finally ceased entirely.

"Now we'll cut her down and gobble that stock of honey!" said Brown.

The tree was felled and the bees when it fell and displayed its hollow interior the two men manned were not only surprised, but disgusted. Instead of layers of rich honey they were greeted by the sight of a tangled mass of rattlesnakes, which had been suffocated by the sulphur fumes. The snakes had chosen the hollow tree for their winter home. There were fifty-eight large rattlers and eight blacksnakes, a puff adder, and three copperheads in the collection. The men Brown had thought was the humming of will bees was made by the rattling of rattlesnakes in coiling as he was passing. Brown and Squires will get eight new gallons of oil out of the rattlesnakes, which will set them at least $100, so their queer tree hive will pay very good day's work after all.—Cor. New York Sun.

How They Learned to Make Perfumes.

What the French know about perfume making is not all the result of their own experience. The traditionary history of the art is that the Moors imparted the little they knew to their captors, the Egyptians, who in turn gave their formulas to the Greeks and Romans. The Moors then took a hand in improving these crude efforts, and when they invaded Europe left their art in Spain, whence it soon reached France. There it found its home and resting place, and today no nation can compete with France in the science and art of perfume making.—New York Evening Sun.

The Swamp Angel.

The Swamp Angel was an 8-inch, 200 pounder Parrott rifled gun, mounted by the Federal troops in a marsh on Morris Island, Charleston harbor, in 1863. On Aug. 22 and 23 the city of Charleston fire and a half miles distant, was shelled, the gun bursting at the thirty-sixth shot. After the war the Swamp Angel was sold for old metal and conveyed to Trenton, but having been identified, it was set up on a granite pedestal at the corner of Perry and Clinton streets in that city.—Detroit Free Press.

For Honest Men's Rights.

That is a rather fine point of law which holds that a man with horrible's tools on his person, who goes up the steps of a dwelling house where he has no legitimate business, but made no attempt to commit burglary, but is in good law for the protection of the community. The steps of a dwelling are private property, and no who trespass upon them with unlawful purpose are committed on unlawful deed.—Philadelphia Ledger.
