Young Lady's Body Partly Eaten by Buzzards and Dogs.

A UTAH AND NORTHERN DECISION.

Shot at a Game of Baseball—Inventories Being Old—Drowned—Oregon Fruit Crop Short.

[illegible]

W. W. Copeland, a well known printer, [illegible] for the past twenty years, [illegible] from Seattle, Wash.

A young man named James [illegible] was shot and killed at [illegible], Oregon, on Monday, by James [illegible], [illegible] years old, in a quarrel over a card game.

There will not be much early fruit in southern Oregon, says the Jacksonville Times, and the prospect for a large crop of late fruit [illegible] [illegible]. [illegible] is dropping from the trees.

About twelve years ago one of the [illegible] in [illegible] was [illegible] of Salem, says the Albany Democrat. [illegible] to the insane asylum at Salem, [illegible].

[illegible]

J. W. Benson, an emigrant, was drowned in Green River Saturday at [illegible] ferry, [illegible] miles north of Green River, Wyoming. Benson was one of several families from Missouri, traveling overland to the northwest, swimming horses across the swollen river. The animals swam to an island in midstream and Benson attempted to swim to them and drive them off. He was carried down stream by the swift current and drowned in the presence of his wife and seven small children. A collection was taken up for the woman, and with her fatherless children she is returning to Missouri.

In conformance with a decision reached at the recent meeting of the Transcontinental Freight association in Denver, the Southern Pacific railway has issued a new tariff sheet showing the [illegible] points to which the California shipper may forward at the same rate as Missouri river [illegible]. These points are Grand Junction, Col., and Tintic Junction, Utah. [illegible]

The body of Miss Edith O'Hara was found in the [illegible] Monday, [illegible] two miles below the crossing where the young woman lost her life, near [illegible], Cal. Buzzards and dogs had eaten the remains until they were barely recognizable. Miss O'Hara was [illegible] [illegible]. On the afternoon of May 28th she was met at [illegible] by Walter Page, a young man whose sister Miss O'Hara was to visit en route to her claim near the Page farm. In order to reach the Page place it was necessary to cross [illegible] creek at Mulberry crossing. Upon entering the creek the water was not high, but when the team reached the middle of the stream an immense [illegible] suddenly came rushing down the canyon, overwhelming the wagon and throwing Miss O'Hara and young Page into the raging torrent. The young man succeeded in grasping his companion, and together they were carried to a barbed wire fence, which Page succeeded in getting hold of. He might have saved Miss O'Hara had not the wagon and horses drifted upon her and tore her from his grasp.

The liability of a railroad company for the death of trainmen because of mistake of telegraph operators who fail to transmit important messages through negligence, was discussed at great length in two opinions handed down by the United States Court of Appeals in San Francisco Monday. The case in point was the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern vs Frost. Judges Gilbert and Ross handed down a majority opinion reversing the lower court in awarding Mrs. Hattie Frost damages for the death of her husband, James Frost, who was an engineer in the employ of the Short Line, and who was killed in a collision between Ogden and Butte through the negligence of the operator at Dillon failing to notify him that there was a wild train ahead. Judge Gilbert, rendering the majority opinion, held that the main question involved was whether the telegraph operator was a fellow servant of the company with the engineer and conductor of the train. It was argued that he was, and that the responsibility of the company was at an end when the dispatcher notified the operator at Dillon that a wild train was on the track, and that Frost's train should sidetrack there until it had passed. In support of this opinion, the decisions of many courts were quoted. Judge Hawley rendered a dissenting opinion, in which he held to the views which Justice Field holds. He said that "the question turns rather on the character of the act than the relation of employes to each other. If the act was one done in the discharge of some positive duty of the master to the servant, then negligence in the act is the negligence of the master." Judge Hawley held that "the general rule that those who entered into the service of a common master became thereby engaged in common service and are fellow-servants, and that the common master is not liable for the negligence of one of his servants which has resulted in injury to his fellow servants," does not furnish the ground upon which the Supreme court [illegible] the [illegible] of the Northern Pacific vs Charles, in which [illegible] [illegible]. It is [illegible] that [illegible], and [illegible] more than sufficient to show that the [illegible] view is that the operator's responsibility entails equal responsibility on the company.
