Acquiring Foreign Languages.

It is natural for persons who live in a foreign country after the age of twenty-one to acquire the language of the country well enough to consort the ordinary English, but there are exceptions. There is a German in New York who has been literally six years, who speaks English without a trace of accent, although he never went to the country until he arrived in America. A professor of French in Chicago, who visited England and Southern Europe, twenty-five years ago, could not say "Please open the window" in English, but he could talk in French to any other man. Professor Jaques "Shanghaied" by the sound of it, than by anything else in Europe.

One of them, who declared that he could pronounce anything in our tongue, was asked to say "Thirty-three Thousand Gooses." He threw up his hands and exclaimed, "Ah, Gerlemen!" This sound is owing to the Germans. Rhenish, and one of the early things in Fresh, which that was a German paper, was a series of poems, commencing a "Tousand water bottles his back and smoking his pipe in the attempt to say "Thanks." —New York Sun.

When a Guide Has Be Forgotten.

A correspondent in American Ice Journal writes:

Here is a way to tell whether a glass is safely annealed when placed among the bees. In fifteen or twenty minutes after you release her (during the time it may say by another, perhaps the long day, and if they do not pronounce for at once start up the hive and go on and give it no further attention regarding the introduction of the queen. A queen is never safe introduced until the bees have royally fed her, and I might say she is safe in summer when she begins to lay.

Growing Grapes.

H. N. Jackson writes in the New York World: "In the grapevine growing districts of France the refuse grapes generally are used in fattening turkeys. They are given a little food besides, but they principally consume skins of the remains of the grapes, even after being distilled.

"It is well known that the refuse fruit in cider making can be advantageously fed to every farm animal and serves to stimulate the appetite of the animals. I think the grape growers of this country should try to use their waste grapes in the direction now named."

Parlor Lyre is a most pleasing strawberry for general culture. The plant is a vigorous grower and its fruit large and excellent.

For the green fly burn tobacco stems and strew thickly over the soil about the plants.

Constipation Relieved.

The fact that the Denver Express will close at 8.30 a.m. during the inaugural ceremonies of the Executive states, should not confound the people that for the regular excursion days it is necessary to be on hand early. The Rio Grande Western train from Payson, Spanish Fork, Springville, Provo, Lehi, American Fork and intermediate points, leaves at Salt Lake at 10 a.m., is sufficiently early for all purposes. It is the intention of the Rio Grande Western on the special days alluded to the various trains to run not special trains which will arrive in Salt Lake not later than 9 a.m. These trains will distance all competitors. The people should watch for the schedule. Street cars will take you from the R. G. W. depot to the Temple Square without change.
