BOUNTIES FOR WILD ANIMALS.

In another part of this issue of the News we publish the law, recently passed by the Legislature, which provides for the payment of rewards for killing certain wild animals and birds. There are in it several important changes from the former statute, the most notable of which is that it makes compulsory the action of the county commissioners in offering rewards in certain cases.

In some respects we consider the law a bad one, for the reason that it includes among some of the objects of its enmity birds especially that should not be destroyed; and we believe that if the law operates in this respect as it was intended to do by those who urged these special features there will be a result not anticipated by them, viz: an increase of pests which these birds would have kept under control. This evil can be remedied in a degree, however, by discriminating action on the part of county commissioners, and we hope that care will be exercised in this regard, as we believe it will be if the facts are brought out.

In connection with this subject we may mention as a fact—not, however, by way of condemning the statute in that regard—that some animals for whose death the State offers a reward are made a source of profit in other markets. During the discussion of the bill in the Legislature that body was favored with a recital of the damage done by certain wild animals—the muskrat, for instance. It was told what a great foe he was to sale canal banks, etc; and nothing was said in this regard that he did not fully deserve. Yet in the northeastern part of the continent this animal has a market value for his fur which will not allow him to become too numerous near the habitation of man. In the great loads of furs that come from the far-away Canada woods to the American markets there are ten muskrat skins to one of other sorts; in a good year these skins bring as high as thirty cents apiece, and farmers' sons and backwoodsmen make good returns from taking them. Of course their wonderful keenness of sight, scent and hearing, and their unsurpassed swimming power, combine to make them difficult of capture, but the ingenuity of those who are in business for profit overcome these, and vast numbers are taken. If, in those districts of the State where some of the wild animals for which rewards are offered are quite numerous, the industry of getting their skins on the market could be started, it might tend materially to decrease their number as a pest. The commoner fur-bearing animals are valuable for their pelts in these days when even cats, dogs, rabbits and skunks are taking the place of the prized otter, sable, martin, beaver and mink.

A BASE SLANDER.

The Church Review published in this city has a portion of its contents under a department called "Among the Churches." In this each of several denominations has a column under its own name, and while the individuality of the writer of the notes and comments therein is not explicitly stated, it is understood that it is the person in charge of the church congregation which has the place allotted to it. In the last issue of the Review that paper announces "Central Christian—B. F. Clay, pastor;" and under the "Central Christian" heading has the following as an announcement for last Sunday:

[illegible]

We invite the people of this community to ask themselves what they think of Mr. Clay in this declaration. As to the assertion that the profanity which is alleged to be "common" here is "largely due to Mormon influence," and that the Priesthood of the Mormon Church are "much given to this form of wickedness," any one who knows the facts in the case knows that whatever profanity is indulged in is not on the part of those who are most under Mormon influence. So strict is the Mormon view on this subject that when that people controlled in municipal affairs here profanity was an offense punishable by fine, and the ordinance was enforced against violators; now such enforcement is unknown. In the public and private teachings of the Priesthood, and in the publications of the Mormon press, the stand taken against profanity is of such a notable character that the frequent repetition of the name of Deity even in praying and preaching—such as is common with many professed teachers of religion—is regarded as a taking of the name of the Lord in vain, and as such receives severe condemnation. The reverend gentleman who penned the statement in the Review did not get his inspiration from the terror of the Ten Commandments or he would not have allowed so base a slander.

In any difference of this kind we always feel to be charitable toward those who may disagree with us, and who even may malign the people we are proud to be associated with; for we know that well-meaning persons are liable sometimes to be deceived or to commit unintentional errors. But with all the charity at our command we do not have much confidence in or use for a person who would take advantage of any privileges he has of getting into print or of speaking from the pulpit to defame and lie about innocent women and children. When the writer of the Central Christian department in the Review charges that "the women and children among the Mormons are guilty of this crime" of profanity, he descends to a level where no decent people will accompany him. Even his own congregation must feel that while condemnation of profanity is eminently proper in a professed Christian teacher, it is absolutely essential that that preacher should not forget another of the Ten Commandments which says: "Thou shalt not bear false witness."

OSMAN DIGMA.

Osman Digma is a name once familiar to newspaper readers, but it had been almost again forgotten, when, some time ago, it was announced that the bearer thereof intended to join the mahdi's forces in Soudan against the Anglo-Egyptian expedition. It is more than likely he will be heard of again, whenever the war in that region breaks out in real earnest.

Originally he was a slave trader, but when the vigilance of the English made that business unprofitable, he went on the regular war path. In 1880 he appeared as the leader of a mahdist force numbering about 20,000 men. He was often defeated by the English and Egyptian troops, but with astonishing rapidity he again organized his scattered soldiers and was ready for a new attack. It was chiefly due to him that the power of the mahdists was extended over the entire Soudan. He is considered a formidable adversary, and although he is now about sixty years old, he is said to be in full possession of his former vigor and energy.

One of his favorite schemes is to circulate false rumors about his place and movements, and then descend like a cyclone upon his unsuspecting enemies. In former wars, the English troops more than once received what they considered reliable information that he had retreated to some distant place, only to find that he was behind the nearest hill, preparing for another attack. The fanatical hordes of the mahdi led by clever generals like Osman are not easy to conquer in their own country. It will cost much money and many lives.

SENTENCING DYNAMITERS.

By his action in the Luzerne county, Pa., dynamite cases, Judge Woodward has given a very effective lesson to a gang that for a long time held quite a district in terror. In part of the county referred to the members of the band virtually had control; they did whatever pleased them, and everybody was afraid to give information against them, fearing the consequences. At last came the act which was the last straw, in which an attempt was made to murder an entire family. The gang was composed of Italians, and since they could not find people who dared to risk their enmity by giving them open offense, their evil inclination developed a dislike of one of their own countrymen who attended to his own affairs and by his industry was doing pretty well in his finances. Out of sheer envy for his prosperity, the band decided that he should be put out of the way, and the three ringleaders, Passarelli, Caruso, and Spell, undertook the job last fall. At midnight, while the man, his wife and baby and two employes were asleep, the house was blown up by dynamite. Owing to an accident the explosive did not all go up at once, and the family, aroused by the falling in pieces of the structure, came, escaped with their lives, but saved nothing else.

The perpetrators of the diabolical crime were apprehended and placed on trial, resulting in a disagreement by the jury. The defense had sought by more than a score of witnesses to prove an alibi, and came near establishing their case by the time being. Subsequent developments, however, led to the prosecution of the witnesses for perjury, and when the second trial came on last week the false swearing was not repeated and the men were convicted. When sentence came to be pronounced, the defendants' counsel asked leniency because the prisoners were already under a five years sentence. Then Judge Woodward [illegible] them all for twenty years, adding a fine of $1,000 and costs, the imprisonment to begin at the end of their former sentence.

It is announced that this judgment of the court brings relief to that part of the county where the defendants operated; and well it might, since the people will have a sense of security not enjoyed for years. The gang has been entirely broken up, its members scattering to various places. The sentence of Judge Woodward will prevent their ever getting together again under the same leadership, and probably has relieved the district permanently of their presence.

DANGER OF SKY SCRAPERS.

A sanitary engineer, of New York, in a letter to the Sun, calls attention to a source of danger in high buildings, not generally thought of. The writer says:

In a recent notable case the entire family of the superintendent of a large office building, occupying spacious rooms on the roof, surrounded by loftier buildings, but with a magnificent outlook over the harbor, have suffered from severe forms of [illegible] disease, including repeated attacks of malarial fever, so that the family have been nearly decimated and have been forced to abandon their apparently ideal quarters. Growing plants were destroyed by the virulent odors which penetrated their rooms, so that it was impossible to open windows, or to occupy the apartments for living purposes.

This view of the subject is an entirely new one and deserves consideration by all whose business it is to look to the sanitary conditions of cities.

SENATOR BROWN has presented a bill in the Senate providing for the establishment in Salt Lake City of an assay office and a branch mint. According to a special to the Tribune, the bill provides an appropriation of $200,000 to carry out its provisions. The officers to be appointed by the President, as contemplated by the bill, will be one superintendent at $3,000, melter and refiner at $2,500, assayer at $2,500, clerks and subordinate workmen to be paid such wages as are customary in such cases. The memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Salt Lake City in favor of the establishment of the assay office accompanies the bill.

THE Peoria, Ills., Star that had its premises burglarized Friday night is positively unkind in its reception to burglars. These individuals had to break into a blacksmith shop, then force their way into an adjoining building, and next to use a hammer and chisel to break into the office of the Oneida wagon and carriage works. There it appeared that their way to securing booty was clear, for the safe door swung partly open. But the safe was empty, not a dollar having been left in it by the cashier, who had put the money in the bank; so the would-be thieves had all their trouble for nothing.

IT is not likely that the Boers go so far as has been asserted and regard President Krueger as a saint or a prophet. But they have good reason to look upon him as a more clever diplomat than some of the foreign aristocrats whom he has had the satisfaction of outgeneraling recently. It looks as though Krueger were a good man for the Boers to keep and for certain English officers of state to leave alone.

Lindsay, Missouri.

Mr. A. L. Armstrong, an old druggist, and a prominent citizen of this enterprising town, says: "I sell some forty different kinds of cough remedies, but have never in my experience sold so much of any one article as I have of Ballard's Horehound Syrup. All who use it say it is the most perfect remedy for Cough, Cold, Consumption, and all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, they have ever tried." It is a specific for Croup and Whooping Cough.
