A NEW JERUSALEM.

The Leader of the Kowshan Colony Is Founding a Colony.

ON THE WEST COAST OF FLORIDA.

Cyrus Teed's Idea of a City and Temple—Three of His "Angles" Have Prepared the Plans.

CHICAGO, April 4.—Away down on the west coast of Florida, 200 miles southwest of Jacksonville, and 70 miles south of Punta Gorda, a small town straggles through the dense evergreens into the Gulf of Mexico. Somewhere inland, and far from the sandy bit of the creek where alligators and leopard cats bring out mosquitoes as thick as flies, Dr. Cyrus Teed, high priest of the Koreshan Unity, is preparing to send a persuasive knocking place for the true believers. On the land it will come time in the future to be known as Estero, for that is the name of the river. But Dr. Teed prefers to call it New Jerusalem and all the followers will know it by that name.

About three months ago Dr. Teed gained a convert in the person of Gustave Demmler, an elderly German of scientific bent. As an architect of no little in the doctrines of the Koreshan society he devoted 320 acres of land to the new organization, and it is upon this land he expected herself Dr. Teed purposes to build the new Jerusalem. There is nothing small in Dr. Teed's idea of a city. He says the society has recently received instructions to make a vast evening thirty-six square miles. Equal to the choice of the time, through which Estero creek flows, and Demmler and Mr. Teed are going to erect a temple of such magnificence as to cast a globally pallid after the famous edifice in Salt Lake City. The temple will stand on a circular island—if it ever shall stand at all—surrounded by a crystal sea furnished by the nearby Estero or Koreshan creek. The diameter of the island will be 1,320 yd according to Dr. Teed's plans and no expense will be spared by an enthusiastic Koreshan in the work of making a suitable and other public buildings.

Dr. Teed has the new Jerusalem all laid out and the design is a marvel of combination of geometrical figures displayed in colored velvet on a big screen which stands in his study at Washington Heights. Three of the "angels" in the same worked three days on the design and it is should need to be for anything else it will make a vast crazy quilt. Dr. Teed calculates that $500,000 Koreshans can be expected on the ground to be occupied by the New Jerusalem.

When the city is all finished, with a fleet of trading vessels and the proper writings, he estimates that the social city will cost $200,000,000.

Where this money is to come from the doctor does not care to say.

THE SITUATION IN PERU.

Text Congress's Minister to Washington Explains Matters.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—General Hurtado, the Peruvian minister to Washington, has held an interview with the assumption of the dictatorship of Peru by General Caceres, and he does not believe that it is possible. The news of the revolt in Peru reached Lima that night from the new minister of foreign affairs announcing the assumption of the presidential office by Pierola, who was acting vice president, and the formation of the new cabinet. The situation in Peru, as it is understood here, is as follows:

There should have been an election of a successor to the presidency last February. The leading candidates were General Caceres, an ex-president, and Birnbaum, the speaker of the house of representatives. By the sudden death of the president, however, the election was postponed indefinitely. The office devolved upon Senor Del Solar, the first vice-president. He had originally been a Caceresist and owes his elevation to the influence of Caceres. He is a stalwart Caceresist and as the latter would be almost certain to secure the succession, it would appear to be a foregone conclusion that Pierola would be divided into party and create from foes by overruling the laws and assuming a dictatorship at the time. The situation is further complicated by failure of Chile to ratify the agreement which had been signed between at the time of the president's death for a determination of a boundary line of the possession of Tacna and Arica and it is stated by the Peruvians that Chile is disposed to postpone the matter until such time as she may have advantage of internal distractions in Peru to perpetuate her possession of the provinces, in defiance of the treaty stipulations.

A BAD BROTHER.

An Italian Applies to the Authorities for Protection.

NEW YORK, April 4.—Hugo Di Vito fears that his stepbrother will kill him upon arriving in this country, and he has applied for protection to Dr. Parsons, commissioner of immigration, in the following letter:

NEW YORK, April 3, 1894.

To the United States commissioner of immigration, Ellis Island, New York harbor:—

With the steamer Columbia, (Hamburg-American Steamship company,) I intend to land in America. I have been informed that he is coming to America for the purpose of taking my life. He is my stepbrother, being the son of my mother's second husband. He is also engaged to be married to my fiancee. My hopes are that by landing away with me all of my father's property will come to him, through my sister, and I assure you I am indeed afraid of him, knowing his good nature. He served six months in prison for attempted murder, and I can bring many witnesses residing here who can testify to his bad character. He was sentenced by the court of Sicione, province of Reggio, Italy.

I have come to America to live. I left some years ago for my native country, but had to leave it on account of these people. I will be very much obliged if you will be in another city, and knowing that you are always careful to keep such persons from entering this country, I send currently apply to you to see that he may be not allowed to come in, as such scheme for my life and my money.

Hoping your pardon for the trouble I am causing you, I am, dear sir,

Yours respectfully,

HUGO DI VITO,

213 Mulberry street, New York City.

The Columbia is due about April 10, and the question of the admission will be on the docket for the last step brother.

Justice Hogan had quite a time locating him, the cap of Joe's head not reaching up to the height of the bench desk. Police Officer Cunningham testified that Joe's gang was a gang of small school boys, all armed with guns, who attacked John Davis, a boy, on Ninth street near Hoboken street, and robbed a school from him. Davis, who weighs nearly 200 pounds, at first declined to be sworn and said he was "afraid of Joe."

"Don't have your lips if you don't give up the money," yelled "desperado" Stumph, and then all the boys said I knew with their knife could be pleaded to their demands. Detective Burns, of the Prince street station, came up and caught Stumph, the rest of the band escaped.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 4.—E. F. Lyman, first assistant librarian of the Chicago Public Library, who disappeared from his home two days ago, was seen today at the Russ house. He arrived here on March 29, and registered as E. Erard, of Cincinnati. He was accompanied by a young lady who thereafter, and once registered as F. Ross, of Chicago. He has not been entirely sound mentally for some time. It was thought that overwork was something to do with his disorder. Besides this, a note he had by reason of a burglar breaking into his Chicago residence, and filing a club made an condition infinitely worse. The self from the revolver attack one bad job, near his head, and gave him such a shock, that he has not yet recovered.

On Monday Dr. C. E. Sowell of Chicago happened to be passing the Russ house when he saw Lyman in the Gazette. He took him to his rooms in town, and has since been looking after him. The son of the missing man is now on his way from Chicago to take him home.

Mr. Gowen could not account for any of his wanderings. As near as could be gathered he came through Ogden on the Union and Central Pacific road. He says he has no clear recollection of anything for a couple of weeks.

Curiously enough, he does not remember how he got his meals or whether he had any or not. He came through leaving only a small value on baggage. He was recognized by the proof of Sissons, proprietor of Sissons, Italy.

I have come to America to live. I left some years ago for my native country, but had to leave it on account of these people. ## HE'S STILL ON THE RACE.

The "Star of Kentucky" Continues His Audacious Story.

Cross-Examination Extracts Some Ideas from Him as to the Nature of Illinois Horse-Jobs.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—Everything was extremely pale this morning. He (Dunn) asking the united women of Gallinburgh to work for him after he carried plaintiff. He never entertained affection for the plaintiff, but was authorized by to have the case acted to remove a scandal through him. He went with her to certain places to understand purposes; he never made any advances; he did not tell unnecessary perjury; the nothing was intended. He denied having passed plaintiff in the road. Mr. Blackburn. His recollection differed from Mr. Blackburn's. The demonstration before Mrs. Blackburn was intended to deceive her.

Further cross-examination brought out the fact that the certificate of marriage to Mrs. Wing was made to appear like the marriage. Mrs. Blackburn would. It was really Mr. Dunn. He had asked Dr. Parson not to make the marriage public, and after the marriage with Mrs. Wing he had written to the hotel in New York registering as Wilson J. Campbell and wife. Defendant denied saying that he intended to marry the plaintiff on the first call on Mrs. Blackburn; he thought Mrs. Blackburn overhead the first interview with the officials and was offended about the matter. Plaintiff first mentioned marriage to him in September, 1892. He had for the example to their ages and her relations with Blackburn. He thought impossible Tom was a continuance of a marriage contract before Mrs. Blackburn's only.

When asked concerning the declaration between the two, he said was a woman to free force relations.

He replied that a man was under obligation to prevent the instruction of a young woman, and that he ought to punished. He was trying to take his punishment manfully. He acknowledged the representation of Mr. Blackburn's as correct, and he testimony.

When Mr. Blackburn's statements were read to the effect that on the second call she said he was the man she shooted at the engagement and that it was a post return for all a wife's devotion, he said he failed to remember the expression.

Breckinridge denied having told Mrs. Blackburn that he never paid attention to Mrs. King, but he admitted that he had told Mrs. Blackburn he was going home to arrange for his divorce. He was not in the habit of engaged that when Congress adjourned he was going home to arrange for his divorce. Breckinridge was not in the habit of telling the truth. Plaintiff was asked if she had ever said to Mrs. Blackburn that she was offended
