"THE KING'S TOUCH."

In England, two centuries ago, popular superstition credited the "royal touch" with curing scrofula. These superstitious practices have now become obsolete, and in their place we have a scientific remedy in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which eliminates the impurities from the blood by the natural channels, thoroughly cleansing the system from all taints and impurities from whatever cause arising. It is truly a royal remedy, world-famed and the only liver, lung and blood remedy guaranteed to benefit or cure in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded. As a regulator of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, "Golden Medical Discovery" cures all bilious attacks, Indigestion and Dyspepsia, Chronic Diarrhœa and kindred ailments. As an alterative, or blood purifier, it manifests its marvelous properties in the cure of the worst Skin and Scrofulous Diseases, Salt-rheum, Tetter, Eczema, and Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, as well as Long-scrofula, commonly known as Pulmonary Consumption, if taken in time and given a fair trial.

$500 REWARD is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Catarrh in the Head which they cannot cure. By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases, no matter how bad, or of how long standing. Fifty cents, by druggists.

IF YOU HAVE

CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, SCROFULA, COUCH or COLD, THROAT AFFECTION, WASTING of FLESH,

THE CINCHONA TREE.

STORY OF THE BLESSED BARK THE COUNTESS CHINCHON TOOK TO EUROPE.

All know the virtue of quinine and many have good cause to think of it gratefully. The medical practitioners of temperate climes have found in the various preparations from the cinchona the valuable remedies for many severe and trying diseases; but in the tropics they are simply indispensable in the treatment of malarial fever and other affections common there. Quinine is also a necessity in the South, the new plains of the great middle and the low lands of the California valleys. There are many places in California where the people, to use their own picturesque expression, "just live off of quinine;" and its consumption in San Francisco is very much larger than is generally imagined. During the prevalence of the grip in the winter, now happily drawing to a close, quinine was almost regarded as a panacea—especially when taken with a whisky accompaniment—and its demand went up, not by the grain but by the pound.

The medicinal properties of the cinchona bark have doubtless been known for centuries to many of the Indian tribes of both Americas, but it is only within the last 150 years that they have been recognized by scientific Amsterdam. Just 140 years before that, 1628, according to Clements R. Markham, in his "Memoir of the Countess of Chinchon," the wife of a Spanish Viceroy of Peru returned to Europe from that country, and having been cured of a fever while abroad by the use of a tree bark prescribed by a native Peruvian, she was wise enough to bring some of it home with the intention of distributing it among the sick on her husband's estate in Spain. The form in which it was then administered was that of the pulverized bark, and it was not unlikely called countess' powder, a name which was retained long after the alkaloid was placed upon the market. Afterwards the species of the tree was named cinchona, while the medicine was called quinine, from the native name of the bark, quina. Some what later some Jesuit missionaries returned from South America, bringing with them supplies of the medicine, and from this fact it was called Jesuit's bark, while yet another was Peruvian bark. Chemical preparations were soon made, and their efficacy was so remarkable that it was determined to introduce the tree into Europe, where it might be scientifically studied. In 1739, says Professor Japp, two Frenchmen, La Condamine and Jussieu, who were then on an exploring expedition in South America, succeeded with much difficulty in getting some plants, but the whole collection was lost in a storm at sea. In 1835, Dr. Forbes Royle, then superintendent of the Botanical Gardens at Saharanpore, earnestly urged the British government to try the culture of the tree in India, and a few plants were secured, but they all died. Then Dr. Weddell, a well known French botanist, made a journey to Bolivia in 1846, and succeeded in bringing back a few seeds, which were planted and grew in the Jardin des Plantes in Paris. About 1855 George Ledger, an Englishman, accompanied by a friend named Bachhouse, made a bark-hunting expedition into Peru. But the expedition wholly failed; Bachhouse was murdered by the Indian bark-gatherers, who thought their business was going to be taken away from them; all the supplies were stolen, all great labor was destroyed, as well as seeds and plants, and some sixty pounds of good dust was missed. Nothing daunted, however, Ledger sent a chinchona expedition in 1861 into the Bolivian wilds. This expedition was more successful, and in 1865 Mr. Ledger was enabled to present a portion of the seeds and plants to his government for planting in India, where quinine was and is one of the necessities of the establishment.

Meantime the Dutch, always alive to interests of this kind, awoke to the great importance of the cinchona culture, and sent out Botanist Hasskarl to Peru in 1852 to collect seeds and plants. He also encountered many difficulties and dangers in his wanderings, had to run the gauntlet of the native bark gatherers, but succeeded in getting seventy-eight cinchona plants to Java.

Then in 1858 the government of India bestirred itself and sent an expedition to Peru under charge of the Clements Markham quoted above. He organized three sub-expeditions to carry on their work simultaneously in Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador, and in the wild and trackless regions of these countries Markham and his associates labored for more than two years. Much of what was secured was lost by delay, by the wanton destruction of the Indians, by rough usage and rough handling, but enough came safely to hand to form the beginning of the great cinchona plantations of India.

The results of all these expeditions were many, valuable and various. For more than a century after Peruvian bark came into use it was supposed to exist only in Loxa, in the ancient kingdom of Quito. Now the quinine producing forests of South America are known to lie in a belt stretching from 10 south latitude to 10 north, following the line of the Andes, over an area of more than 1000 miles, besides which India has several million trees in culture, Java has extensive forests of the trees, and successful attempts at cinchona culture have been made in Jamaica, Reunion, Guadaloupe, Brazil, the Azores and Algeria.

In the next place it was not known until the trees were scientifically studied which species of cinchona was the most valuable. Now it is known that the genus cinchona includes as many as thirty-six species, but only about half a dozen of these are found available for yield—for medicinal purposes. Indeed, the prominent cinchonas of today are but four in number—the crown bark, or cinchona officinalis; the red bark, or succirubra; the yellow bark, or calisaya, and the gray bark, or nitida. Some of the trees are more marked as the yielders of pure quinine, others of all the alkaloids in a mixed state.—Ex.

Queen of Spain.

Maria Christina, the widowed queen of Spain, who rules as regent during the minority of her infant son, has a kind heart. Upon the death of the sister of Castelar, the Republican leader and orator, the Queen, knowing how close was the intimacy that had existed between them, sent the following message by the president of the council:

"Tell Senor Castelar that I forget that he is the head of the Republican party, to remember only that he is a national glory, a great orator, an unrivaled artist, and that I share his sorrow as a Spaniard and as a queen."

A Spanish poet waged war against the queen's regency so bitterly that at last he was tried, condemned and exiled. Being dependent on his pen for his livelihood, his wife and children left behind were soon reduced to poverty. For their sake he solicited the queen's pardon. It was granted at once and he returned to Spain. He then begged the favor of an audience that he might express in person to the queen his gratitude, and was graciously received. After a few kind words, the queen suddenly said:

"You are not very rich, senor, literary men of genius rarely are, and you have a large family. I am told."

"I have six children, your majesty."

"Six!" said the queen. "Well, there will be three for you and three for me."

"From that day," writes the author of "Cosmopolitan Recollections," "the three daughters of the poet were educated at the regent's expense, under her own personal supervision; and monarchy counts one loyal subject more."—Youth's Companion.

Syndicate of Lawyers.

A young lawyer in Newark, N. J., has commenced the formation of a syndicate to control the legal business of that city. His plan is to get options for exclusive employment from all the leading law firms, and then so subdivide the business as to allow the elders to retire from active co-operations, only to be called in as counsellors in intricate cases, and employ young men on salaries to attend to the active work. Thus each department would have its specialist, and the divorce lawyer would not interfere with railroad cases which he did not understand, and insurance, bankruptcy and libel suits would not get mixed. The plan doubtless has its advantages, particularly to the lawyers, for the syndicate would have charge of both sides of all cases, and could so manage as to get all there was from each party before bringing them to a conclusion. This might have the effect of causing people to consider well before going to law, and in this way save some unnecessary litigation.—Omaha World.

The First Step.

Perhaps you are run down, can't eat, can't sleep, can't think, can't do anything to your satisfaction, and you wonder what ails you. You should heed the warning—you are taking the first step into Nervous Prostration. You need the Nerve Tonic, and in Electric Bitters you will find the exact remedy for restoring your nervous system to its normal, healthy condition. Surprising results follow the use of this great Nerve Tonic and Alterative. Your appetite returns, good digestion is restored, and the Liver and Kidneys resume healthy action. For sale at A. C. YOST WRITING MACHINE

THE LATEST INVENTION OF G. S. N. YOST, the inventor of the Remington and Caligraph Type Writers.

The YOST retains all the good features of Mr. Yost's former machines, while overcoming the faults which that self-styled expert executive revealed in them.

The standard point of the YOST is instantaneous durability, combined with speed. We guarantee it to outlast two typewriters of any other make. In the Salt Lake Business College is a YOST that has been in constant use, ten hours a day, for five months. Hundreds have purchased on its record of whose have been serious that great have turned any other machine with ten weeks of their purchase; yet not one has been expected or repaired or upgraded, and the alignment is absolutely perfect. No other type-writer could show such a record.

The YOST prints directly from the type. It uses no ribbon. It can be no possibility over and out of alignment. It is light, simple, and can be used by beginners without possibility of injury to the machine.

The YOST is in use by over fifty business colleges, stenographers, and students of Salt Lake City, most of whom we refer as to its merits.

The YOST is sold by the DESERET EVENING NEWS.

OPINION OF AN EXPERT!

Mrs. Mary B. Welch, Teacher of Domestic Economy at State University of Iowa.

"My deliberate judgment is that the oven of the Range, as compared with others, is not only more equally heated in every part—front as well as rear—but as a result of its superior ventilation the food placed therein is better cooked, while retaining a sweeter flavor, and a larger proportion of its best juices. I have found, also, that the consumption of fuel in this Range for a given amount of work, is much less than any other."
