UTAH'S SEMI-CENTENNIAL.

We are fully aware that the suggested Inter-mountain Semi-centennial Exposition in Utah in the summer of 1897 will require marked executive ability to make it successful from a financial as well as an artistic point of view, and we are firmly convinced that the State has the talent to accomplish this desirable end. Knowing the resources of the State and the patriotism of the people, we have no hesitancy in expressing the opinion that united, intelligent effort would leave no room for failure. We appreciate the suggestions of many who have taken a friendly interest in the enterprise, as to the difficulties that may interpose; the consideration of these is vitally essential, for such difficulties must be met and overcome, and there is no use concealing their magnitude or belittling the energy and means necessary to subdue them. Hints and propositions as to site, plans of special features also are very acceptable, hence we give space to the following with pleasure:

SALT LAKE CITY, March 5, 1896.

To the Editor:

I my resolution series no. [illegible] the suggestion for a semi-centennial Inter-mountain fair, to commemorate the entry of the Pioneers into the valley of the Great Salt Lake in 1847, originated with the DESERET NEWS.

It was a happy thought and one I am proud to say that received the enthusiasm of our State Legislature. Every person I have spoken with is in full accord with the proposition.

From a commercial point of view there is no movement in the nature of a fair that would attract more people to our city than this one. Tens of thousands from all the states and territories around us would come here. Grand national festivals could be held; everything of historic value connected with our town and neighboring states could be placed on exhibition; also relics of the early struggles of the first settlers. Tabernacle exhibitions, without the outlay of a dime on the part of the management. Now is the opportunity for others of our citizens who have had some experience in such matters to present some of their ideas. The concerts to commence as well as the season of entertaining them are appropriate topics for consideration.

OLD AGE OF GREAT MEN.

The National Popular Review gives a long list of men who have retained their mental vigor and activity to an age which quite mediocrities or a decline. Chevreul, de Lesseps, Gladstone and Bismarck head the list. Pius IX., although living in turbulent times and suffering from much mental anxiety and illness, enjoyed a high age and retained full possession of his faculties to the last. The dramatist Ulrich has composed his last dramatic piece at the age of ninety-one. Michael Angelo was still at work on his large canvases at ninety-eight, and Titian at ninety still painted with the vigor of his early youth. Oesterlen Malar, an Austrian, was in the saddle and active at eighty, and might have won the battle of Marengo but for the arrival of Desaix. The Venetian Doge Henry Dandolo, in the eleventh century, had his eyesight when young, while on an embassy to Constantinople, but notwithstanding this disadvantage, he rose to the highest offices in the state and conducted several wars with great success. At the advanced age of eighty-three he besieged and captured Constantinople. Fontenelle was still vigorous at ninety-eight, and Newton at eighty-three wrestled at the solution of philosophical problems before him. Cornaro enjoyed better health at the age of ninety-five than at thirty.

There are many other cases that can be mentioned may be exceptional, but they seem to indicate that the intellectual activity of human beings may go on notwithstanding the failing strength of the body, and that with a living in conformity to the laws of the Creator even the body may be kept in a comparative state of preservation very close to the century mark.

ONE KNEW, THE OTHER DIDN'T.

We have made reference already to the reflections cast upon the younger states and territories by President Cleveland, in his remarks before the Presbyterian home mission board at New York on March 3, in which the chief executive assumed that in what he was pleased to call "the newly settled portions of our vast domain" there was less of the religious and moral predominating than in the crowded East. The President no doubt voiced the general belief among religious people in the older states, but his prominence in a national capacity gave special attention to his words, and his ill-advised expressions have been sharply criticised in some quarters—perhaps even more sharply than the occasion warranted. If the President has paid attention to these criticisms, and has remembered the remarks of a speaker who followed him and who received little notice in the telegraphed report of the proceedings, he must have felt that among his audience there were some rather returned to the West from himself, because they knew by personal observation something of this part of the country. The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage followed President Cleveland, and said in his reference to the West:

You need remember that it is easy about Lookout in the morning of our nation's life. Great outcrops of Bibles and four among what are called the "Territories" of Washington and Utah, and the of which we pay our admiring glance in this city, and spread out as the "great Angel" spread his wings, in the form of a cross, and commanded Jerusalem to become the Christmas place and to make good quotations that have reached depending upon American and epistolary [illegible]

Mr. Talmage well understands what Mr. Cleveland did not, that the active and incentive committees of the East introduced so much, especially for the Pious and stalwart workers between the forces of good and evil" reserved to be the President or his anything to [illegible] in the newer portions of the country, where poverty and vice and social turbulence in the higher parts of society, have not yet gained such weapons of control as are at most made a necessity in the older and more thickly settled portions. Talmage there have turned out to be personal observation to his topic, and Mr. Cleveland's not so [illegible] information on the matter of [illegible] so much is fully qualified to be President and to deal fairly with all the people of the great nation until he [illegible] meeting by referral observation of the Wild country. Every President ought to be required to make a visit to each state in the Union during the first year of his office. President Cleveland has done so, it is not likely he would have made the remarks which have called forth severe criticism from the West because of that blunder by whose the Rev. Talmage passed [illegible], President Cleveland certainly would have done so in journeying to the Pacific coast.

FITCH'S FINANCIAL PLANK.

It is now [illegible] a question as to [illegible] the distinguished Clarke Fitch, ex-Senator of Nevada, late Utah, and for the last two decades an Arizonian, raised his voice among national legislators in favor of attention to Utah for high in a Stack. His attitude on that point and his career here in the early seventies are [illegible] well remembered by those who [illegible] in Utah in those days. There was never an emergency out Tom Fitch had a plan to meet it, and his suggestions in political propositions were usually of a character to allow the name of people the broadest opportunity for expressing their views and carrying them into effect. Hence it is not strange to find him still using the following as a suitable silver plank for the party to which he belongs in its platform in the next presidential campaign. He does not regard it as a "cinch" on the silver men, but a sense of finding out the real sentiment of the voting people will. He proposes this as the silver platform on which the Democratic party should stand in order to win the election:

The money of the Republican party of [illegible] is [illegible] and [illegible] Democratic party, of [illegible] Democratic party, and in all things belonging. Upon questions of finance, currency and coinage the Republicans of [illegible] Republicans in [illegible] and [illegible] Democrats in the majority in the [illegible] in Congress, we have [illegible] in this platform, and that [illegible] to [illegible] a [illegible] of party [illegible]. We, Democrats, [illegible] and [illegible] appeals to the people of the [illegible] direct [illegible] of [illegible], pledging the members of the [illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible] side, on the [illegible] and patriotism of the [illegible] officers, to [illegible] legislation with [illegible] [illegible] that may be supported by a majority of the Republican capital [illegible] and [illegible] in Congress.

Of course the gold and other [illegible] would [illegible] a proposition, [illegible] there would be a prospect of one directly against them, while [illegible] and [illegible] the silver men would be [illegible] where to [illegible] if they could [illegible] any [illegible]. But after all there is an element of intrinsic in it, since it would allow the expression of the majority of the people to control, and in this a fitting demonstration [illegible], however, that Democrats always were the choice of the people instead of politicians with whom [illegible]. The adoption of such a plank by any party would be a new thing in American politics—political messages would a tighter grip than the actual carrying out of such a proposition would allow, still, to the present financial discussion there is no harm in [illegible] what the party platform on silver may be like.

How would the D. O. P. managers broadcast look upon Senator Shelby M. Cullom, of Illinois, for President, and Senator George C. Perkins, of California, for Vice President, as the Republican standard bearers in the presidential campaign this fall? There are a good many straws already pointing to the political breeze going in that direction.

THE HERALD-DEMOCRAT, Hammer, referring to an article in this paper on protection, says: "Is it the News against Bentley?" Not quite; we are for the progress, prosperity and happiness of Bentley every time, that the moral, intellectual and physical standard of her enterprising people may be kept at the highest mark.

Note it is England that is being guarded against because of big shiners. The record this year shows a remarkably heavy increase in the dozens there, and instead of European nations objecting to American pork they are worrying about the British bar.

PEOPLE WHO WERE content to have March come in "like a lion" now wonder how long the coming is going to keep up.

Mr. A. L.
