attempt to force the committee to report the rule. Up to this evening they have secured between ninety and a hundred names to the petition, but it will require 116. Many believe that it will be found impossible to get them.

The most jubilant members of the House just now are the People's party congressmen, who rejoice in the discomfiture of the Democratic majority, and proclaim that the failure of the Democratic House to pass a free coinage bill means that the People's party will carry six or eight States in the coming campaign.

Watson (Ga.) talked at length to this effect tonight, and said that this action is the death of the Democratic organization, particularly in the South.

Anarchy in Rio Grande do Sul.

LONDON, March 29.—A Pisco dispatch from Montevideo says: Refugees from Rio Grande do Sul declare that a state of anarchy prevails there.

ROBBERS AND DETECTIVES.

A Desperate Fight Reported at Boyles, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 29.—A fight occurred between detectives and train robbers last night at Boyle Gap, at close quarters. When the officers arrived at the scene they separated. As one squad was passing through the brush they came full on the train wreckers in the dark, and the firing was aimless. A hundred shots were fired. Finally the wreckers broke cover. They were mounted, and immediate pursuit was impossible. The detectives with bloodhounds started in pursuit at break of day.

THEY WERE SHOOTING FOR PUR.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 29.—The story of the alleged battle between the robbers and train-robbers, at Boyles, at 2 o'clock this morning, proves a canard. An attempt was made on Sunday day night to wreck the L. & N. train. The police sent from here failed to find the robbers, and fired off fifty shots for fun. The real trail of the the robbers was found today and is being followed.

Boomers Increasing Daily.

KINGFISHER, Okla., March 29.—The Cheyenne and Arapahoe boomers are buoyant. Forty-seven men are already in line before the land office. United States Marshal Grimes has sworn in a large number of deputies to prevent disorder.

Death's Victim.

BERLIN, March 29.—Gen. Kissanlin Von Alvensleben has died at the age of 81.

Storm in the Pacific.

MONTREY, Cal., March 29.—The steamer "Benita" from San Francisco was forced into port today, her machinery becoming clogged by a terrific storm at sea. Off Point Sur the "Benita" sighted what she supposed to be the British warship "Warspite," bound for Esquimalt. The "Warspite" was flying signals, but, owing to the hazy weather they could not be discovered. She was making no headway against the storm.

Memorial Services Over General Sherman.

ALBANY, N. Y., March 29.—Over three thousand persons listened to Chauncey M. Depew's oration on the occasion of the memorial services in honor of General William T. Sherman of New York, held tonight in Meeker hall, this city. Members of the legislature proceeded to the hall in a body.

President Harrison Reported Shot.

WASHINGTON, March 29.—The report that the President had been shot this morning spread consternation throughout the city, until it was learned that it was utterly without foundation.

The Cost of the Chilian War.

The recent civil war in Chili cost the victors, the Congressional party, $15,000,000, according to a recent estimate made by the Chilian newspapers. Of that amount $800,000 was contributed by Senora Dona Juana Edwards, the mother of Don Augustin Edwards, minister of finance, from her private fortune. The cost of the war to the Balmaceda partisans has not been figured out, perhaps because they lost everything, and it is a big thing to estimate on.

A Rattlesnake in a Threshing Machine.

Some days past a large threshing machine was brought to town. Yesterday, while being opened for repairs, a large rattlesnake was found in it taking his winter nap. The machine had been hauled about twelve miles. His snakeship had been somewhat disturbed. He was 6 feet 5 inches long and had eight rattles.—Lockhart Co. Galveston News.

A Thousand Dollar Nugget.

It has just leaked out that on Wednesday E. Getchel, a Georgetown miner, found a nugget valued at $1,000 in Devine gulch, one mile east of Georgetown. When Getchel found the nugget he was digging out the gravel, which had been condemned as worked out, for the purpose of filling a souvenir at the mouth of the gulch. He noticed a few colors, and followed up the lead to where he found what he supposed to be a piece of quartz, but was astonished upon finding it to be gold. Its weight is 36½ ounces.—Georgetown (Colo.) Letter.

Big Profits in Cheap Gas.

The last annual report of the manager of the city gas works in Milton, Penn., shows a profit of nearly $30,000 upon capital amounting to only $175,000 invested in plant. The average net cost of gas during the year was about thirty cents per 1,000 feet, and the average selling price was ninety-two cents.—New York Journal.

Curious Effect of the Aurora.

The presence of the aurora borealis had a queer effect upon the paper on which the Boston Journal is printed the other day. The paper is run dry, and it became so heavily charged with electricity that it snapped every time the big press was started, and the fragments adhered as though joined with mucilage.—Journalist.

Wheat is the Banana Elect Where.

The banana possesses all the essentials to the sustenance of life. Of wheat alone, or potatoes alone, life cannot be said. When taken as a steady diet the banana is cooked—baked dry in the green state, pulped and boiled in water as a soup or cut in slices and fried.—Guldbransen's Geographical Magazine.

ROMANCE OF AN ACTRESS.

Brief and Startling Life Story of Mrs. Millie Price-Dow.

The subject of the successfully brief biography, Mrs. Millie Price-Dow, has had an eventful life for one so young. It has been a life in which a peculiar interest attaches, by reason of the fact that the experiences of Mrs. Dow have been varied. Her career has been at times brightened by sunshine of unusual intensity, and there has been at times darkness by shadows that caused her pathway when least expected.

Throughout it all she has been the same persevering plucky little woman, at all times commanding and generously receiving the sincere sympathy of her sex. The tender heart of woman naturally goes out to struggling sisterhood, and the women of the United States will find much to sit like of the young woman in interest them and increase their natural anxiety to see her eventually crowned with success, both in her profession and in private life.

Mrs. Mille Pride-Dow was born in Catherine street, Strand, London, England, July 1, 1870. She developed into a precocious child. She was bright, apt and imitative. Children like her are rare, and her brightness at an early age outlined her future career—that of a theatrical performer, for it is on the stage that precocity, beauty and talent find their surest and richest reward.

Mrs. Price-Dow made her appearance before the public at the tender age of six years. The little tots of an actress who wonderfully gifted and her success in her favorite line has steadily increased from that day to this. Whatever darksome shadows Fate may have cast over her domestic life, her public career has been one of unexampled success.

The play in which she first appeared was a version of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." It was given at the Duke's Theatre in Holborn, with Clarence Hell in the principal role. Between the second and third act in Fatte Mille appeared in a boyisherous specialty known as the Zepler Dance.

Her next appearance was at the Surrey Theatre, south side of London, where she appeared as Arthur in "Queen's Evidence," with the late Harry Jackson. During the action of the drama she danced a sailor's hornpipe, giving it all the rhythmic action that belongs to that graceful dance.

Her talents had attracted the attention of many prominent London theatrical managers, and she accepted an engagement under the management of George Conquest, appearing in the character of Lucy in "Hand and Glove." She had now reached the age of twelve years, and was famous as the greatest child actress and cancer London had ever known.

After her "Hand and Glove" engagement she made a successful tour of the provinces with Fred W. Sydney. She appeared on this tour as Arthur in "Queen's Evidence," with the late Harry Jackson. During the action of the drama she danced a sailor's hornpipe, giving it all the rhythmic action that belongs to that graceful dance.

Her talents had attracted the attention of many prominent London theatrical managers, and she accepted an engagement under the management of George Conquest, appearing in the character of Lucy in "Hand and Glove." She had now reached the age of twelve years, and was famous as the greatest child actress and cancer London had ever known.

After her "Hand and Glove" engagement she made a successful tour of the provinces with Fred W. Sydney. She appeared on this tour as Arthur in "Queen's Evidence," with the late Harry Jackson. This tour lasted twelve months, and established her reputation firmer than ever as a deserving public favorite.

At the conclusion of this engagement she was engaged to appear at the Alhambra, the Trocadero and the Pavilion in her singing and dancing specialties. She appeared at all of these places on the same night at different hours, and so great was her popularity with the patrons of these popular pieces of amusement, that her engagement lasted two years, and would have lasted longer, but the fame of the young artist had reached Paris, a city in which theatrical managers are keenly on the alert for successful actors and actresses, and she received numerous flattering offers to appear in the French capital. She finally accepted an engagement at the Folies Bergere, where she received a handsome salary and all her expenses, including carriages to and from the theatre, and a dozen other items that fell to the lot of the famous and popular theatrical artist.

It was during her engagement at this theatre that the well-known American manager, Mr. M. B. Leavitt, saw and recognized her value as a attraction for this country. He at once engaged her, and she sailed for America on September 1, 1888.

Her metropolitan appearance was made under the management of Keene & Bial. Her New York engagement lasted nine months, which is in itself an evidence of how she was received in the critical metropolis of America. Her first American star terminated with an engagement with Hallen & Hart in "Adonis Dix," after which she returned to London to visit her mother and sister.

Here it should be observed that a change in the private life of this public favorite is revealed by the knowledge that this young woman, in all her theatrical triumphs, has always established a tender love for her mother and her invalid sister, amounting almost to devotion. It is a beautiful trait in any character, but especially so in one where adulation is so ready to turn the head of an artist and leave them the essence and embodiment of selfishness. Instead of being spoiled by public adulation, it seems only to develop the gentler and sympathetic side of her naturally sweet disposition.

Her next American season began with Miss Price as the principal attraction of Harry A Sheafferts Vaudevilles. At the close of her season with them, she engaged with Donnelly & Girard to appear as Jimpsey in "Natural Gas." She remained with them until ill health, largely occasioned by mental distress and suffering, forced her to temporarily retire from the jubilant life.

This company during her engagement with them, played at the Tabor Grand opera House in Denver. It was at this time that Millie Price was introduced to Clarence Merill Dow, the son of a wealthy banker. They met, they loved—at least Clarence swore he loved her—and the next day they were married. It was considered by all a propitious union, and the young actress had at last found a resting place for the popular little actress. But, alas, for man's vows, oaths and protestations, for in little more than a week the merry, gaiety, hopeful bride was a deserted wife. What happened, what anguish, she must have suffered who knows but herself can tell.

At the conclusion of her engagement with Donnelly & Girard, she went with those immensely popular managers, Hoyt & Thomas, appearing as The Flirt in a "A Trip to Chinatown," but ill health again forced her into retirement from the stage.

Upon her convalescence she found herself without money. She was amongst strangers and penniless. Her vacion career for in the face, but the plucky spirit that had helped her overcome all obstacles to her profession did not desert her. She pawned her diamonds and other valuables together with her wardrobe, and realized enough money therefrom to take her to Denver, where she hoped her husband, who had sworn to "love, honor and cherish her," would provide her with proper support. Ill in mind and body, and without money, she tried all means to obtain an interview with her truant husband, but all her efforts in this direction were in vain.

Life for her seemed a ceaseless waste, a dreary blank, a burden not worth bearing.

Her arrival having been chronicled in the daily press, it caught the eye of the ever wakeful agent of Sackett & Lawler. He sought an interview, and finally succeeded in having her accept an engagement with the amusement firm he represented. She was to appear as a special feature, if she could fulfill her engagement, but she plucky undertook to do so and succeeded, appearing at Wonderland, the most popular family resort in Denver. She received a perfect ovation at the hands of the sympathetic women of Denver, who evidenced their sincerity by turning out in thousands to witness and applaud her performances.

The first week more than $6,000 paid in paid admission to see her. At one time during her Denver engagement could the vast crowds be accommodated, thousands being nightly turned away.

No better evidence of the kindly, cheering, helpful sentiment of Denver's women could be produced than was shown by their action in daily crowding the theatre to greet Mrs. Price-Dow.

This clever artist and charming little woman whose life reveals illustrious, but has been in fact a stern reality, will appear at Wonderland, Salt Lake City, commencing Thursday, March 31st. 4t
