MADE HIS ESCAPE.

Andrew P. Swenson Gets Away From Deputy Marshals.

AT THE INSANE ASYLUM DOORS.

He Was Being Transferred from the Penitentiary—Slips Away in the Dark.

U. S. Marshal Brigham's Provo posse and two deputies from Salt Lake are making vigorous efforts to discover the whereabouts of Andrew P. Swenson, who was taken from the penitentiary last evening to be lodged in the insane asylum at Provo, but up to a late hour this afternoon the efforts had been unsuccessful.

Swenson had about six months more to serve on a two years' sentence for shooting Carl Anderson, at Union, Salt Lake county, in July 1894. Anderson was shot through the leg which was amputated, but the injured man died recently, dying soon after the operation. Swenson has been a trusty at the penitentiary for some time past, but owing in part to the "pinching" of some prisoners, he became impressed with the idea that somebody was plotting against him. This worked upon him to the extent that it unhinged his mind, and yesterday afternoon, at the usual court examination, he was adjudged insane and sent to the asylum. He has two children living in Provo, to one of which he is devotedly attached. Yesterday afternoon he secured permission from Warden W. C. A. Smith Jr., and was been considerably worse for wear afterwards. The other spell was when he was being taken to the depot on evening, six men being required to hold him.

Officers Clemmons and Shoot were ordered by Marshal Brigham to take Swenson to the asylum, and the three left in Provo all right. Just at the asylum door, when he was being removed from the hack to the steps of the building, Swenson made a break, and was around the corner of the asylum in an instant. It was about 7:30, and the night was dark. The officers rushed after him, but he was gone right, and were considerably chagrined at the prospect of his returning this. The night was pretty cold, and there was some uneasiness lest he had gone to the mountains and perished. He had no coat on when he broke loose from the officers. If he is still alive the officers think they will capture him before he passes through another night.

Ordered that notice to creditors of the estate of Eli Wigill, deceased, be given by the administrator for four weeks to present their claims to display to Marvin, within four months from the first publication of the notice, December 13.

COMPANY L, N. G. U.

Invites Comparison on Certain Points With any Company in the State.

CANNONVILLE, Utah, December 4, 1895.

To the Editor:

On December 2d, at 2 o'clock p. m., company L, 1st Infantry N. G. U., were inspected by Captain John M. Dunning, in the absence of Inspector General Colonel E. W. Tullous, who was unavoidably detained at Salt Lake City. The members of company L responded to the call for inspection in true military style, thirty-five being present out of a possible forty enrolled. The company fell in for inspection at the sound of the assembly in "flight marching order." The rifles and equipments of the men were found to be in excellent conditions. After a short drill in the manual of arms, the company "wheeled by fours" and took up the line of march for the target range and at once opened hostilities on the "bulls eye" at 200 yards. The score made was excellent and fully proves that the "boys" are getting accustomed to their rifles, as well as being well trained in marksmanship. We would make special mention of the extraordinary good shooting done by Sergeant Joseph Hess, who made in three consecutive shots out of a possible fifteen. In the evening a nice social hall was held to which the boys in blue and their numerous friends, numbering sixty couples, "tripped the light fantastic" in their hearts content, a very pleasing and invigorating feature of which was the grand march led by First Sergeant John H. Davis and lady, in which only the soldier lads participated.

I feel in duty bound to pen you a few more points in regard to the personnel of company L, to wit: We have in our company the oldest man in the guard, Wm. J. Powell, aged 65, an old veteran of the civil war, and still able and willing to perform the many duties that fall to the lot of the soldier. We also have in our ranks the youngest man in our state militia (company musician), eleven years old. His knowledge of the bugle is the source of commending the service with it, to say the least, indeed, surprising to one not going. We take pride in noting the fact of our having in company L three fathers and sons, with the sons, as well as also different sets of own brothers (one family three, Addleton brothers), and the Johnson brothers, three in number, while as to brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law—we have them galore. Last but not least we claim to Dyke Dunning, the oldest soldier in years of service in the entire guard, having eleven years, two months and nineteen days to his credit in the service of Uncle Sam, as well as enjoying the irrevocable distinction of being the youngest soldier ever to enlist in defense of the flag, which Captain Dunning did at the age of ten years, one month and two days, as a member in company "K," Seventh N. Y. infantry. If there is a company, troop or battery in the National Guard of Utah that can equal this record of company "L" we would indeed be pleased to hear of that fact.

In citing these facts in connection with company "L" we do not do so with a view of boasting, but simply to show how strange these paradoxes and are all centered in one company of the N. G. U. That old saying that a man's good deeds are never known till after his death has been fittingly illustrated by the attitude at some of the death beds of this place, since our command is being better understood and the purposes and motives of the guard in general. It is here, as with nearly every town in Utah where exists a company of the National Guard, that some of the people at first do not acknowledge that the soldiers of the present era are as equal to and in many, very many instances, the superior in daily and eventually, of the evidence they are daily thrown in contact with. But no sooner do they find out the fact that we are of the people, their true friends and defenders, than we are enrolled for our manly qualities, and people who formerly passed us with a jeer and a frown now and heartily shake the hand of the "citizen-soldier." It is pleasing to note this condition of affairs, but it would be still more pleasing to have all the people with whom we are thrown in contact, fully understand the object and principles of the organization of the National Guard, and then to appreciate the men who have taken an oath to serve the state without pay or hope of reward in defending, at the risk of their lives, if necessary, the liver and property of the people, thereby manifesting a proper respect and due regard for the uniform of their country's soldier. And we are pleased to note that this feeling is fast gaining ground among the better class of our citizens all over the state, and that the spirit of love of country, which is the true essence of true patriotism, is prevalent. The spirit of Mars and pervades the breasts of many of our citizens here in Cannonville and adjacent towns, which is evidenced by the many applicants for martial honors who apply to the commander of company "L" for enlistment in his company. And it is hoped that in the very near future the necessary funds will be appropriated by our State Legislature whereby the various companies of present constituting the National Guard of Utah, can rent or purchase the legal armory space strength of sixty men. Then the ladies of these worthy young men to enlist in defense of our State and Nation will be fully realized. JOHN M. DUNNING,

Captain First Infantry N. G. U.

Licensed to Marry.

A marriage license was issued today to George H. Taylor, aged 30, and Ollie Green, aged 24, both of this city.

SERIOUSLY INJURED.

A Conductor On the Salt Lake Street Railway Falls From the Top of a Car.

C. D. Sparks, who is employed as a conductor by the Salt Lake Street rail way company met with an accident last night which will incapacitate him for work for some time to come. Mr. Sparks was coupling on the East Temple street line, when Wilkes near the U. C. railway shed, the trolly of his car became somewhat out of gear.

As is the usual custom with conductors he climbed to the top of the car to adjust the trolly and put it in good working order, and while doing this a jar of the car caused him to lose his balance, and he was precipitated to the hard, frozen ground below, alighting on his head, the fall rendering the unfortunate man unconscious for some time. Dr. Richards, the company's physician, was called to attend him, and he later regained consciousness and was made as comfortable as could be expected. The injury, while not necessarily dangerous, is a serious one, but Mr. Sparks was reported as getting along nicely today.

Home From Great Britain.

Elder Francis Cannon, of West Jordan, called at the News office this afternoon, having returned from a mission to Great Britain on Sunday last. He left home for that part of the world Nov. 4, 1893, and on resuming his field of labor was set apart to work in the Welsh conference. He reports little prejudice in that part of the vineyard with exceedingly bright outlooks for the future. He enjoyed good health and is glad to be back to his mountain home once again.

POLICE COURT.

Nelson and Steele Discharged—The Usual Quota of Drunks.

C. Nelson and Joel Steele were arraigned before Justice Smith this afternoon on a charge of fast driving, to which they both pleaded not guilty. The complaint charged them with running into and seriously injuring Mrs. J. R. Whalen at the corner of Second South and East Temple last evening. Mrs. Whalen was walking along from Walker Brothers bank corner presumably to catch a car, when a smart horse entrance in which were seated the defendants, came along at a lively gait, striking Mrs. Whalen and throwing her violently to the ground. The blow rendered the lady unconscious and she was immediately removed to her home and attended to by Dr. Wright, who pronounced her getting along nicely today. The men were quickly arrested and were released only upon their giving bonds.

When the defendants entered their plea of not guilty this afternoon, Margaret Ford, who had the case in charge, asked Prosecutor James to move for a dismissal, as from the investigation he had found the accident to have been purely accidental. Mrs. Whalen was the only witness the prosecution would be able to get, and on account of her still being confined to her room, nothing could be done in the matter. The prosecution therefore asked for a dismissal, and upon being assured that the case had been thoroughly investigated, Judge Smith granted the request.

Tom Dowd, whose altered name appears to be very appropriate, pleaded guilty this morning to drunkenness, and was fined $5, sentence was afterward suspended and the man left to sober in the afternoon. He didn't show up, however, and his goes has been confiscated to his profit.

M. Sexton is another who exhibited having been intoxicated, but he pleaded with Judge Smith to dismiss as he was suffering intense pain with neuralgia. The court intimated that the man's face was swollen with drink, but he would have to "take it on the chin" all the while that his version of the affair was correct. Sexton is an old offender and pretty always under the influence of intoxicants. Judge Smith sentenced him to imprisonment for twenty days.

John Dowd forfeited $5 for the same offense.

"Catalog."

That is the way Principal Farris, of the Farris Industrial school of Big Rapids, spells it. We saw in print why this medieval French word might not be dropped from a number of other English words as "prologue," "demologue," etc. A few years ago certain dating orthographical innovators dropped the superfluous "ue" from "synagogue," leaving it, the "ogue" was left off "monologue," "Atlantic," etc. If one wants to see the extent to which this hopping-off process has been carried in the last three centuries, let him compare modern English with English "as she was wrote" in the days of Geoffrey Chaucer. We welcome Brother Farris's "catalog." Let us have these sensible shortenings so far as they can come.—Learning by Doing.
