SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

A convention of the Sunday schools of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will be held in the Assembly Hall, Salt Lake City, Monday and Tuesday, November 28th and 29th, 1898. The Convention will be called to order at 9:30 a.m. Monday, the 28th, and there sessions will be held each day, at 9:30 a.m., 2 o'clock and 7:30 p.m. Each Sunday school in the Church is invited to send at least one delegate and as many more as can attend the sessions of the convention. The names of these delegates should be forwarded at once to the general secretary, room 405, Templeton building, Salt Lake City, and tickets of admission to reserved seats and orders for badges will be thereupon issued. Arrangements have been made with the railroads to carry delegates residing at distant points at the rate of one fare for a round trip. Delegates from outlying districts who may not be able to secure accommodations, will be provided for by the administration committee. In addition to the delegates, the future generally are invited to attend all the meetings of the Convention and assist in making the occasion a success and one that will advance the Sunday school cause.

THE MONEY QUESTION.

Elsewhere in the "News" appears a communication from Mr. John M. Horner, of Honolulu, which was brought out by an editorial in these columns headed as above. In the issue, Mr. Horner, it will be observed, claims to have simplified what has all along been and to the multitude is yet a most complex question—that of the philosophy and regulation of the financial system of the country. He claims to have eliminated the element of mystery and so clarified the theme that any one of ordinary understanding may no longer be astray. To accomplish this seemingly magical result, the gentleman has written a book of nearly 300 pages entitled "National Finance and Public Money," a copy of which accompanied the communication. A reference to the preface gives a fair idea of the nature of the elucidation following.

After alluding to men who handle money as a business, such as bankers, brokers and so on, as the class who produce nothing and whose profits are taken from the people who create all the wealth of the world, he refers to the present intelligence being the means of showing that all prevailing money systems are at fault. The masses produce and the money changers take away all that is not absolutely necessary to maintain the physical subsistence of the producers—all of which was made possible by lack of education and being taught to obey, but with enlightenment now so general that all can comprehend for the system to continue would, in his judgment, be accounted criminal. Reference is made to the frequently recurring panics and disasters which arise from the unnatural money system prevailing so generally and attention is to be turned to the subject until the money changing class no longer have a monopoly of knowledge regarding what was once a mysterious subject.

The author shows that, as in all great undertakings, the first steps are attended by distrust, doubt and disorganization with the methods in use this being in anticipation to be all classes who are not dependent upon the manipulation of money and is sought by the economic proprietors to change, all looking for the measures that are to arrange equitably the profits of wealth and insure its fair proportion of the produces. While much has been published and numerous methods presented, he states, few have advanced which would result in giving to the people a medium to facilitate the production and distribution of wealth, which would have at all times the same value as United States gold coin, and be so elastic that it would always be obtained for the use of agriculture, manufactures and commerce and never in excessive supply.

Numerous citations are made from the public utterances of American statesmen and of political platforms, after which the three constitutional bills the draft of a bill which it is proposed shall become law. It is entitled "An act to organize a government banking department and to authorize its officers to make circulate and redeem money." It provides for the creation of a parent bank with one or more branches in every state, the money of the country shall be of as at present, except that the banks are authorized to issue paper money as loans to be secured by national and state bonds at 90 per cent of their face value and as good and silver bullion at the same rate. It is a voluntary measure, giving or securing to bank with authorized powers that cannot be seized; they will supply a par currency for the use of the people; and depositing on the security of the gold in its vaults the exhibits, whose currency would have more redemption; the net always used and herein with its profits divided for the benefit of all, and so on. The various features are too numerous and too valuable to be adequately reviewed in a newspaper article, only a general idea of the subject being given.

The plan embraces some of the features of Populism, but the gold standard of values and redemption of paper currency at once forbid such a connection. A cursory glance through the pages of the book leads us to conclude that if the author has succeeded in entirely divesting the "mysterious" which the "News" attached to the subject in its article last spoken of, he seems to have invested it with another, and most it is quite as perplexing to the ordinary intellect. For instance, how is so fine, diffused and enlarged knowledge to be secured to the masses through the establishment and maintenance of a banking system which would be so partially national as the one to wage and differing from it only in the modes of regulation and method, is not at this time clear. When to one is added the necessity of giving government or state bonds or bullion as security for loans from the bank, and on which security only ninety per cent of their value can be obtained, there occurs another obstruction to the understanding. Most people would rather have a government bond worth a given sum than but per cent less than such sum in circulating medium; it would be of more value to them, even though the loan was at a low rate of interest, and the same thing applies to gold and silver bullion.

There are many other features of the measure that are worth reading and considering. Perhaps some of them might, just now, light on what has been known referred to, but whether or not space forbids at the present time.

A NECESSARY CORRECTION.

The Salt Lake Tribune, in its efforts to array the nation against the Mormon population of Utah, now says that any Mormon Elder can perform the marriage ceremony. The statement is made for the benefit of those not acquainted with Mormonism. It is intended to deceive, to give those the erroneous impression that the members of the Mormon Church can with impunity evade the laws of the State and the so-called Manifesto of President Wilford Woodruff. It is virtually an indirect charge that the Mormons are too in to be trusted; that their promises have been violated and that they have broken faith with the nation.

The Tribune is mistaken. Mormon Elders have no such power as that attributed to them. When the revelation on plural marriage was given, it was expressly stated that it could be received into only "through him whom I (God) have anointed and appointed unto this power." Unless authorized in this way, the ceremony was pronounced "invalid." It follows that when the President of the Church, whom God "anointed and appointed unto this power," by divine command discontinued the ordinance, as was done by the late President Woodruff, there is no Elder, nor any other official in the Church, or out of the Church, who has the authority or power to perform a valid plural marriage. Now this fact is perfectly well known to all the members of the Church, and it should be clear to all who are interested in a correct understanding of the situation in Utah.

With the political question involved in the Tribune complaint the "News" has at present nothing to do, but we cannot allow the impression to go abroad (most probably, that any Mormon Elder is permitted to violate sacred covenants.

WHAT THEY BELIEVE.

Some time ago the "News" mentioned the fact that Count Tolstoi was interesting himself in the welfare of a Russian sect known as the Tolstoian, and that he was in a position to raise money and to ask them to escape persecution in Russia by emigrating thus to the United States.

The New York Press contains some interesting information regarding this sect. The word means "spirit worshipper" or "worshipper of the spirit." It is said they are their origin to the efforts of an English Quaker. They must have learned from the teachings of Elias Hicksite. They do not believe in a personal God, but they believe in a divine trinity consisting of Memory, Reason and Will. They believe in the immortality of the soul, but say that a person could live as well as dead, and that the soul does not need the body until the fifteenth or sixteenth year after death. They recognize no authority in man, and discourage the forcing of one man to do another's bidding. They are far from being revolutionists, however. They have never offered the slightest resistance to the government. They bravely bear any wound on account of offense, and their actions are not blasted.

The persecution of this sect began on August 28, 1895. In the place of Pizal, it is alleged that "all idolatrous and superstitious practices were shall be banished to Siberia for life and hard labor, and that any Greek priest found guilty of these crimes should have his chasuble torn from his back, or his stole, or the other ecclesiastical authority of corporal punishment inflicted by the hand of the chief priest shall be given their own bodies to the flames." Tolstoi, in his work, "The Kingdom of God Is Within You," says: "Not only do people in the defense of the, and enlightenment of allowing the defenseless."

In consequence of the cruse about 15,000 of the communists were transported. In 1897 Alexander I gave his permission for the sect to colonize on a Siberian Sinai. In 1899 the government seized the farm lands and ordered all who were unbaptized to be military service. In 1900 they got permission to return to Russia and about 15,000 of them went back. From this day up to a year ago they were driven from one part of Russia to another, never being allowed to remain in one place longer than six months. By that means they remained there been reduced to 10,000.

The Dukhobortsi are said to be fatalists and thrifty and would, therefore, be desirable citizens. It is probable, too, that they, in a country where civil authority rests in the hands of the people instead of with an autocrat, would be a very time recognize the legitimacy of human authority and that they would cause no trouble on that account. The United States has stood the standard of liberty for all nations. Let the oppressed come and enjoy, meanwhile worship in accordance with the dictates of conscience.

IMPROVED ARMOR.

The awesome ingenuity of man never seems to be so active as when devising some means of advanced warfare, such as a charge of increased power or a means of more secure defense. When Dreyfuss shot and was brought to trial, it was thought by many that the enthusiasm and sentimentality of a boiling nation which would be so certainly national as the one to wage and differing from it only in the modes of regulation and method, is not at this time clear. When to one is added the necessity of giving government or state bonds or bullion as security for loans from the bank, and on which security only ninety per cent of their value can be obtained, there occurs another obstruction to the understanding. PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

I have been taking Piso's Cure for Consumption since 1885, for Coughs and Colds. I had an attack of Lagrippe in 1890, and have had others since. In the Winter of 1896-7, I had a spell of Bronchitis, lasting all winter, and having a troublesome cough, until I again tried Piso's Cure, which relieved me.—Mrs. M. B. SMALLEY, Colorado Springs, Colo., August 19, 1898.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. SOLD BY DRUGGISTS. CONSUMPTION
