EVENING NEWS.

Thursday - Oct. 14, 1886

REPORT OF THE DEAF MUTE INSTITUTE.

The public will be interested to know that the Institute for the education of deaf mutes is now in successful operation in connection with the Deseret University. The pupils still meet in classes in the University building, and board at a large and commodious house on Second North Street, in a neighborhood convenient to the University. The house has been thoroughly renovated within and without. A new coat of paint gives the whole building a neat appearance. The grounds are cleansed every afternoon after school hours by the boys, under the direction of Professor White, while the girls attend to their domestic affairs under the supervision of Mrs. White, who is assisted in her work by two capable and experienced hearing women, one of whom serves as a maid of all work and the other as a sort of assistant matron or housekeeper; so that the household is in complete working order, insuring the best of care for the comfort of the pupils.

Particular attention has been paid to the sanitary condition of the Institute, after the methods usual in eastern institutions for the deaf and dumb. In order to prevent offensive odors from the waste pipe, which might endanger the health of the inmates, a trap and a ventilator were attached to the sink by an experienced plumber to carry off the gases from the waste water. Pure water is obtained from a flowing well recently sunk, and the old well is filled up. In short, as one prominent physician has said, there is no better regulated place in town.

Visitors who have passed through the house have said with one voice "the pupils have a pretty and comfortable home. They must be happy here."

In regard to the pupils, the quota of five beneficiaries allowed by the County Court of Salt Lake County at the Institute has been filled up, but we regret to say that there are several more applicants from this county who cannot be admitted to the Institute on that account. Among the applicants are two peculiar cases, a boy and a girl, whose hearing is perfect, but whose vocal organs are so defective that they cannot be taught in the public schools and they come to the Deaf Mute Department to learn reading, writing, arithmetic and other branches of a common school education.

As may be imagined, the Principal has been put to a great deal of expense to start the Institute and he cannot admit other applicants free of charge, though he is anxious to help a few students from distant counties who cannot afford, from their limited finances, to support the pupils at the Institute. Some county courts which have signified their intention of paying for the support of a few pupils from their counties, cannot make an appropriation by law until December next, and in the meantime these pupils must be boarded and lodged at the expense of the Institute. Some kind-hearted people in distant counties have been moving in the matter and using their influence to send more uneducated deaf mutes to the University by means of their respective county courts.

Matters are progressing finely so far in the education of the deaf mutes of this Territory, and with patience, greater results may be expected as time goes on.

COLORADO ITEMS.

At Fairplay, on Oct. 11, the District court commenced the trial of James J. Smith, who is indicted for the murder of Mr. Grow in Hall's Valley. The trial will probably occupy a good portion of the week, as both the deceased and the prisoner had many friends in the county.

During the high wind a few nights ago, a span of the State bridge at Grand Junction, partially completed, and the false work, were blown down. Some of the iron work is bent and broken and entirely unfit for use. It will have to be replaced by a second shipment, which will cause from two to three weeks of delay.

Six Indians from the Uintah agency, with two half-breeds, arrived at Grand Junction Sunday night, in pursuit of two thieves, who they claim stole 25 or 30 horses from them. The thieves have been heard from at two points east of there, and the deputy sheriff has started after them. The probabilities were that they would be overtaken soon.

A cabin situated above Toledo avenue, and between Chestnut and Second streets, Leadville, was on the 11th inst., the scene of a tragedy by which Jake Blount, one of the notorious Missouri outlaws, was shot and instantly killed. It seems that at about three o'clock Blount came to the cabin armed with a pistol, and tried to effect an entrance and broke out a panel of the back door. Failing here he went to the front door and while trying to force it open was shot from the inside, the ball passing through the door and into the head of Blount, entering at the right side of the neck, and passing upwards, killing him instantly. Lloyd Murree, the man who was inside the house and who is supposed to have done the shooting, made good his escape at once. The same evening at about 7 o'clock he sent word to the sheriff that he was at a cabin on the hill and was afraid to come down and give himself up. The sheriff went after him and he is now in jail. Nobody blames him for the killing.

FOUR ACRES A FORTUNE.

A FRENCH FARMER WHO SUCCEEDED BY INDOMITABLE PLUCK.

In one of Joaquin Miller's letters to the Chicago Times, he tells how a French communist, escaping with his life, found his way to California in some way, became the owner of four acres of sand, gravel and chaparral, in the upper part of the Sacramento valley. To day that four acres is a big fortune. The French farmer has his cows, his horses and his pigs. The four acres are all he can cultivate, and they produce all he wants. The secret of his success was a well, a wind-mill and the water thus brought to the surface. Intelligent work did the rest. The French farmer had no capital but his own hands. Mr. Miller justly says this is the way to make California populous and profitable, to cure the country of tramps and communists. But the writer goes on to preach a water appropriation sermon in the French farmer's application of water to his four acres of land, gravel and chaparral. He wants the Sacramento river turned out of its bed above Redding and scattered in a thousand streams over the valley. This will make the portion of the valley which is now parched and yellow blossom like the spring. The imagination of the writer enables him to draw a pretty picture. He does not give himself much trouble about the other side of the question. The Sacramento river has its uses as a navigable stream and there are beautiful homes along its banks. The capital city depends largely for its business on the river that flows past it. There are millions upon millions of dollars' worth of property that would not be worth more than the French communist's four acres were when he found them if the Sacramento should be turned out of its bed at Redding. The law that would permit the diversion of the waters of the Sacramento river would apply of course to the American river, and deprive of its two streams. Sacramento city would be reduced to the rank and resources of an ordinary inland town. It seems to us that Mr. Miller might have made better use of the text the French farmer afforded him. The French farmer did not turn the Sacramento river at Redding or elsewhere. He did not take any water that any other person was using. He dug a well and put up a windmill. The water rose to the surface and made his four acres fertile. There is no reason to suppose that the French farmer took all the water there was in the stream underground. He took what he needed, and left the rest for some other man who had sense enough to dig for it. Would it not be better to test the magnitude of these underground streams before we authorize the desolation of cities and villages for the benefit of remote localities? Even the most primitive code of morals teaches that it is better to create wealth for ourselves than to appropriate that which another had created, even though the numbers of the appropriators may give the color of law to the act of appropriation.—San Francisco Call.

Its practical operation is conservative and methodical—its discipline strict and exacting. The luxury of its passenger accommodations is unequaled in the West, unsurpassed in the world.
