WHITE INDIAN GAME FOWLS

They Will Probably Be the Next Craze in Poultry.

The English breeder of the White Indian Game fowl writes to the Massachusetts Ploughman as follows:

During the last few years we have been perfecting and making a new breed bitherto unknown in England—viz, White Indian Game—and which will prove to be better and handsomer than their dark cousins. We find them hardier layers and better table birds as they dress more like the black pile Game when dressed, and are more delicate when the dark colour. We feed a good many of this beautiful variety but cannot breed enough to meet the demand. We have bred them from the pencilled variety, and have had them from the positive world.

About seven years ago a gentleman, Mr. Jameson, sent a cock to Dalkeith from India called to me our poultry, etc. He then spoke of the Indian Game fowl, but we had then no idea of having any from him. In fact we had at the time so many different varieties as we could manage, and besides we did not then know the good qualities of the Indian Game.

Mr. Jameson purchased from us a pen each of Minorcas and Andalusians, and when he left our place he said, "I will send you a couple of fine Indian fowls." We never thought he meant it, and thought no more about it until a box of the "Indian fowls" arrived in grand trim, when we put them out to breed. They were not pure white, but creamy colored or about the color of a pale chamois hen. The cock was, however, nearly white. We were surprised to find nearly all the chicks from these cream white the first season, and we soon now got an all colored stock.

During the last five years we have mated them carefully and breed them so as to procure fairly high class specimens and have succeeded beautifully, as we can now show White Indian Games equal to the best Dark Indian Games that have been bred in England.

A flock of 40 of these white fowls been splendid on a grass run, their tall and stately carriage adding greatly to their appearance.

The Deadly Tsetse.

A correspondent of The Breeder's Gazette writes:

"They worry cattle until they become thin and weak and take special delight in massing by thousands and thousands all over the entire body of weak and defenseless animals, as these animals become powerless to oppose them. And in another way they will (or may) cause the death of thousands of stock. It is in this way: They eat or suck blood about in spots on cattle—on the neck, dewlap, back of the shoulder blades and under the belly of the animals. The spots when first discernible have a dry, scorched appearance of the cuticle, with the hair extra off short and stubby close to the skin, as if burned off. These spots may be about the size of a nickel or as large as a dollar, but never after of the smaller or intermediate size. The cuticle is next eaten or blistered away, and a raw, bloody sore results which the post continues to widen."

One breeder has applied the following mixture to the parts and finds it knocks them every time:

"Take kerosene, spirits of turpentine, sulphur and carbolic ointment and rub them well and rub or sprinkle it on the cows. I used it four weeks ago, and the flies have not bothered the cows since."

Yet another farmer has spoken upon his herds a strong kerosene mixture and found it effective.

The Highest Priced Horse.

The arrival in America of the emperor of Germany himself would not have created the excitement to horse breeding and racing circles that the coming of Orsmonde (Mr. Orsmonde, the great racing stallion who never was beaten. The $150,000 paid for the horse by Mr. W. O'Gorman MacDonough marks the California race horse as owner of the highest priced horse in the world. Orsmonde is now 10 years old. His sire was Bend d'Or, dam Lily Agnes. As a 4-year old Orsmonde had won $145,000 on the turf. He has retired to the stud. He is probably the greatest horse traveler on record. Three years ago he was bought from the Duke of Westminster by Isaac Joseph of Buenos Ayres for $90,000 and taken to South America. Then he was returned to Europe and sold to his present owner. Orsmonde is a pure bay, the only white about him being a tiny patch which the cuticle covers. He is 16.1 hands high. Mr. MacDonough will retain his prize upon his own California farm for breeding purposes only.

With Orsmonde arrived on the steamer also three Indian mares. All had either sold by him at their sides of were bought to be full of foal. America is probably the only country possessing a choice of one horse enough and ship enough to pay $150,000 for a horse.

Spring Pig.

John Gould, one of Uncle's prominent farmers, tells in a letter to Country Gentleman that for three years he has been sowing wheat and corn, preparing the ground the last autumn. The pine all of the corn is taken in, and Jones will be sowing wheat for fall feed, but in the meantime two fields and one fallow there will be a sowing of rye. This is the spring, and the wheat of three years, fresh, is clover and was a poor in the meantime, on which to pasture cattle to clover, rye and growing under the mulching from.

Contest Cows for Sale.

American Cultivator says that when sheep are kept in stalls they are greedy close to the ground from a constant circling of the sheep greedy with the fingers it is seeing. It produces a leaner feed and one than the common practice of allowing the first crop to grow until in blossom and then cutting it close to the ground. Not of the clover is fed off. Cattle, children and other is stated needs in it should be moving from to the orchard with a scythe.

Agricultural News and Notes.

And now it is reported that the plot beings in France has at last been sale food.

A beet sugar factory is projected at Eugene, Or., and experiments by a committee made one, it is said, it be made this year in the surrounding country.

It is now proposed to build silos complete and then fill the pits to see for lots of the country made for setting up.

Indiana claims a fine wheat crop.

The American Dairy Journal is authority for the statement that there will be a large yield of honey this year.

There is a scarcity of fodder reported in Great Britain. France and Germany, all of which countries are importing hay from the United States.

Butchers in various parts of New York city are beginning to experiment with electrical fuel. They say that steaks or roasts bought in a room where the electric fuel is used are better, and they also find that the scorching of the little fan blades keeps away the flies.

Information given by the department of agriculture makes it appear that the winter wheat crop will not exceed 250,000,000 bushels and may not be more than 200,000,000. The condition is 75. The spring wheat condition is also very poor, and its yield will not exceed 150,000,000 bushels.

Hood's Cures

Sciatic Rheumatism

Quick Relief and Perfect Cure

Mr. G. H. Pietrick, Sunbury, Pa.

"I was so lame at times I could not walk across the room without crutches. I took a good many remedies which did me no good. A friend recommended a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I began to take it. The relief was great and has been more and more so with every bottle. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine for a man to take who has Rheumatism. I recommend it to all the sick I meet, and I shall always speak a good word for it whenever and wherever I can."

FAT PEOPLE.

To such a good weight, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC has been the best remedy I ever used. It strengthens the digestive organs, so that the food taken is properly digested, and the system is nourished by it. Consequently, fat flesh is produced. My weight was increased from 140 to 180 pounds, and I feel as well as I ever did in my life. I can recommend this medicine to all who desire to increase their flesh. Yours truly, MRS. ALICE CORNWALL, 1 Ashland Place, Boston, Mass.
