In a grove of olive trees, the party had prayer and the native shepherd boys stood listening in wonder to the strange language. The sheep became intermingled and then each boy stand-ing on a knoil called out to his flock; their sheep knew their voices, and a 5-year-old child, who stood on the or-gan shelf beside the organist and sang their sheep knew their voices, and separating from the others followed their own shepherds. The glee club sang, "The song of victory," and the meeting adjourned.

STORAGE OF SNOW.

Some Practical Observations Offered On that Vital Subject.

A. N. Iverson of Mines, Park county, Mont., in a communication to the "News," makes the following observations in relation to the storage of snow that falls in the mountains:

"I have often read ideas, that have been advanced, as to the means of saying the snow in the mountains, that there might be a water supply in the late summer. Most of these theories, I presume, come from professional men who have little or no practical knowl-edge of the subject. Now I have spent most of my life in the mountains and for the past 25 years have lived in them A great many people make entirely. the claim that timber shades the snow, and thus preserves it. This is not correct. First for the reason that only about one-half of the snowfall reaches the ground. A large portion of the snow lodges in the trees and is evaporated before it falls on the ground. The second reason is, the snow does not freeze as hard in the timber as in places where there is no timber. Third, the snow melts first and more rapidly under a tree than it does where there are no trees, climatic conditions being the same. This is because there is a circulation of air around each Timber prevents the snow from drift. ing or sliding, which are the two best means of preserving the snow, until the late summer. The claim is also made that vegetation causes more moisture to fall, which may be true. But moisture makes more vegetation. "The cheapest and safest means storing water, is to go to the canyons in the freezing time of the year and cause the small streams to form into by making ditches. The water must be divided into streams so that it will freeze. In the winter of '48 and '79 I was getting out ties in American Fork canyon, in one of the side canyons, be divided into streams so that it will where there was a small stream, which I liver and bowel regulator in the world.
