was Mr. Apgar's card, on the back which was written;

"Mr. Hyde says pay him $1,000 hrough T. D. Husted.-J. W. A." Mr. Apgar said he knew nothing of te transaction, but said that was his ard. He visited J. W. Alexander in T. but what the call was for he did to remember but he thought it much remember, but he thought it was intercede for a friend. He was not to intercede for a friend. He was not a meinber of the assembly at that time, through a candidate. He was defeated, James W. Husted, Jr., a brother of Thomas Husted, was Mr. Apgar's pre-decessor in the assembly. During the session of 1895 and 1896 Mr. Apgar was private secretary to Lleut.- Gov. Saxton. In 1857 he was in Washington. He said he had had no conversation about moneys with any-one. He did not know how his card be-came attached to the voucher. It was not in his handwriting, but the initials on the card were subsequently identia the card were subsequently identi-ed as those of James W. Alexander fied as those of James W. Alexander and written by him. The voucher was signed by T. D. Husted and the check was also endorsed by Husted. Mr. Ap-gar said he did not know what be-came of the money. He received none of it, and never heard of the Equitable paying anything toward his campaign expenses. It was known that on Oct. 18, 1895, Thomas D. Husted received a check for $1,000, and another on Oct. 15, 1896. On both of these dates James W. Husted, Jr., was a member of the as-sembly. Mr. Husted had never told him that he had ever received such im that he had ever received such

Mr. Appar said he knew A. C. Fields, and had known him for many years when he ran for office in West-chester county. He said Fields was vigorous in his political activity and "senerally elected whoever he started out to elect." Fields was not in Mr. Appar's assembly district and never, to bis knowledge, became active in the same district. Mr. Appar said he never received any money from Fields and never heard of anybody who did. He declared that he did not know of the maintenance of the houser in Albany. He had had talks with Mr. Fields on legislative bills, which originated in the haurance department, Mr. Fields fa-fored and which were passed unani-monsily, Mr. Apgar was then a mem-ber of the insurance committee. He reserved that he never had an inter-view with Fields on any bills to which be lead was opposed. Probably, he said, he saw Fields not more than three times during any legislative session. Apgar said he knew A. hes during any legislative session. The had visited Fields at the Albany ouse once socially. He never had at-rided any entertainment at the Alny house.

Linder pressure from Mr. Hughes, Mr. Angar said that in 1837 his relations with Mr. Husted were somewhat strained. He asked that he be not questioned about the matter, as Mr. Husted is dead,

TARBELL RESUMES.

Mr. Apgar was then excused, and Mr. Tarbell resumed his testimony, Mr Farbell said that nearly all companie ay a larger commission to agents than he Equitable, but he believed the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance company paid less and does a substan-tial business. He thought rebating could still further be dong away with by limiting the first year commissions on premiums to 40 per cent and reducon premiums to 40 per cent and reduc-ing the renewal commissions by law. Mr. Tarbell described the policy of "twisting," which is the system of an agent getting a policy-holder to sur-render a policy in one company to take out one in another. He said this was the most reprehensible form of competition encountered by any com-pany, and was almost always done by misrepresentation on the part of the misrepresentation on the part of the agent. An agent who does this robs the assured; because the assured has to pay a greater premium by reason of his advanced age over the period a

Mr. Tarbell said that since Jan. 1, 1990, the total cost of the Equitable so-ciety's business in the United States and Cauada was a fraction over 61 per cent of the premiums. Mr. Tarbell de-tailed a fight with the New York Life n which 200 agents were won over by the Equitable in this city, Mr. Tarbell was still on the stand when adjournment was taken until tomorrow morning.
