A LAST WORD.

The NEWS hopes that every reader who is legally registered and entitled to vote will tomorrow exercise that great American right by depositing a fair, free ballot for the principles and the men of his choice. We hope that all will see the importance of the full voting strength of the commonwealth being brought out, and that each one will appreciate the need of order, honor and legality in all that shall be done. Let every man constitute himself a committee of one to see to it that no trickery or violence is committed, and that no bribery, intimidation or unfair advantage be exercised for or against any candidate, ticket or voter. Let the election be conducted with all necessary energy and enthusiasm, but let it be preserved from the taint of crime of even the slightest character.

As to the respective tickets and the names that appear thereon, this paper has no word of advice to give. They are before the people on their merits, having been, we assume, properly considered and agreed upon by the representatives of the respective parties in regular convention assembled. Certainly the NEWS has no grievance against any party or candidate that it wishes to receive satisfaction for through anybody's ballot. In neither party are there candidates whom we do not like, and on neither ticket are there men against whom we wish revenge. Our simple hope is that an occasion of so much importance shall be marked by as few as possible of the excesses, and none whatever of the abuses and wrongs, that detract from the dignity and consequence of a day when, in its proper observance, the people for once emphatically assert themselves as their only earthly masters.

END OF THE CAMPAIGN.

That this is the last day of the campaign is a matter of public congratulation. The labor of "converting" the presumably unsophisticated voter was begun early and has been prosecuted vigorously. The number of stump speakers who have been engaged in the cause is remarkably large, and the patience with which the populace have accommodatingly congregated in order to give those orators an opportunity to talk, is astonishing.

The campaign has been a long one, and hotly contested. Few will dispute that it has engendered more heat than was really essential to a clear comprehension, on the part of the voters, of the issues at stake. In fact, if there had been less heat, there would have been more light, personal feeling having tended to distract the judgment of many of the citizens of the Territory, who usually display coolness, good sense and conservatism, even under the most exciting circumstances.

When the ballots are counted and the result is declared, pangs of disappointment will shoot through many a breast. But a determination should be formed and adhered to, by every voter, and especially by every party worker and candidate, to accept the result with cheerful good nature, and try every vestige of animosity which the closely contested struggle may have engendered.

Barring the misrepresentation and hyperbole which seem to be inseparable from an American political campaign, and judging the contestants by the standard usually applied in such cases in the various states of the Union, the fight has been a pretty square one on both sides. Immediately after the completion of the registration, the Utah Commission appointed an officer to hear complaints regarding it, for the county; but as it chanced it was not Saturday afternoon, or a solitary complaint charging the illegal admission to, or exclusion from, the lists of any name had been filed. This is remarkably creditable proof that the registration was a fair one; and if attempts have been made in either side to perfect arrangements whereby the ballot box might be stuffed, tenable proof of them has not been presented. The NEWS, therefore, expects to see a tolerably honest election and a fair result; and believes that the result so finally declared will be the just 50 score of the strength of the two great national parties in Utah at the present time.

It has been made to appear by satisfactory evidence that any ballot box has been unlawfully tampered with, or corrupted, or that the right of franchise has been unlawfully abridged, every person participating in, or responsible in any degree for, the perpetration of such a crime should be promptly punished; but accusations of such character ought not to be made in the absence of substantial proof in their support.

The NEWS is not among those who believe that the success or failure of either party, or of any candidate or set of candidates, will mean our heading Hades. Its prosperity is of a character too permanent and substantial to be very severely shaken by any local political disarrangement likely to take place. In fact, the close rivalry and sharp criticism bestowed by each party upon the other guarantee good government, no matter which holds the offices, and this state of affairs would be conducive to the public good rather than otherwise, if the element of personal ill-feeling could only be eliminated.

In its happy position of neutrality, the NEWS awaits with interest, but without anxiety, the count of the votes and the announcement of the result. Having no candidate in the field, the defeat of none will disappoint us; but we do hope that the men who shall be chosen for the Constitutional convention will comprise the best of those who have been nominated, and that they will prepare a good charter for our glorious new State!

IS VICTORIA OF ISRAEL?

It will interest a great many people—not only Englishmen and Jews everywhere, but Christian nations generally—to know, on the authority of a reliable London publication, that Queen Victoria is deeply interested in the question of the identity between the Lost Ten Tribes and the British people. This interest takes a personal turn, for her majesty is desirous to prove her own descent from David. A clergyman who lectured before the queen on the subject of the Ten Tribes, discovered this kindness. He did not suspect that she and Prince Albert had known for years what he thought he had been the first to discover, but when summoned to Windsor to deliver his lecture, he was informed of their previous knowledge. Legend says that she is descended from David through the eldest daughter of Zedekiah, who, with her sister, fled to Ireland in charge of Jeremiah, the prophet, then an old man, to be married to Heremon, the reigning king of Ulster. The queen has a highly-valued genealogical tree in which David's name is at the root, while far up at a remote top-branch is the name of Victoria. Her majesty's interest in the chosen people and their land does not end here. All books regarding the house of David and the Holy Land possess the deepest interest for her and give her great delight. To look down on Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives is, it is said, one of the great ungratified desires of Queen Victoria's life.

"THE COUNTESS OF BLOOD."

A noted psychological writer of Breslau, Germany, named Von Ebersberg, has in press a book which he has written as a psychological study, and which gives a history of one of the most remarkable criminals that ever lived, viz., Countess Elizabeth Bathori, who was known in her lifetime as the "Countess of Blood." Although nearly three hundred years have elapsed since her career of crime was at its height, the record of her deeds possesses a horrible interest to the modern student of history, and especially to the investigator of criminal phenomena. Weird is not that the announcement of the book to accompanied by the assurance that its author is a man of learning and reputation, who has thoroughly verified by historic proofs every statement contained in it, the possibility of such a career of crime as it recounts might well be doubted.

A special dispatch which lately appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle gives some of the leading facts contained in the work, which is said to be the authentic account of the deeds of the "Countess of Blood" ever published, although she is a character well known to those who have read the history of her country and times. She was the niece of Bathori, king of Poland, and wife of a Hungarian nobleman. She was born in the year 1562 and died in 1611, aged 49 years. She was widely celebrated for her beauty, and was educated, accomplished, and apparently refined.

In conversation the countess is a golden fit of anger seized a sharp pointed instrument which happened to be near hand, and plunged it into the neck of her maid. The injured wretch was not, and the blood spurted forth, covering the hands and face of the mistress. A fiend seized in celerity at the sight, and a demonicker slave apparently took possession of her. She raised the feet of the prostrate body of the girl in such a manner as to accelerate the flow of blood from the wound in the neck, but there was enough the countess held to a vessel and washed her hands and face in it, for the purpose of beautifying her complexion. Her vanity was gratified by the belief that the bath of blood made her skin softer and her complexion more beautiful, and she planned to continue the practice. Her fame was a mistress in which there were a number of dungeons, well suited to her purpose. Her husband, one of her servants, a man and two women, and all four appear to have become possessed of the same fiendish spirit that controlled her. With their aid many young girls belonging in the vicinity were kidnapped, or in some way captured, or enveigled into the chateau, and confined in a dungeon until the countess was in need of fresh blood for a bath, when she sent or caused to be sent that of her prisoners. On one occasion she gave a supper to which she invited twenty-five young women from the neighborhood, who attended. After the feast the guests were invited, one by one, to visit the subterranean portion of the chateau, and as they did so they were bundled into and shut up in the dungeons, and all of them were subsequently murdered.

As the countess became familiar with the crime of murder, she began to take delight in torturing her victims, prior to shedding their blood. In short, she, her husband, and the servants who aided her, became monsters of the most hideous and devilish type. The number of victims that were murdered during a series of years, is said to exceed 600, the vanity of the countess, and her diabolical delight in witnessing suffering and in shedding blood being the main motives for the butchery.

Her guilt became notorious, but her mother was governor of the province and she was allied to royalty, hence she was enabled to escape punishment. At length, at a certain Christmas festival, her cousin, the governor, heard that she had imprisoned about a score of young women with the intention of killing them during the holidays, so she had repeatedly done before. He resolved to put a stop to her career of bloodshed, and entered the chateau by force. In the dungeons he found twenty young women, whom he released. Owing to having royal blood in her veins, the countess was not condemned to death, but to imprisonment for life. After being in existence thirty-one years, the diet of starvation and maltreatment, receiving a taste of what she had inflicted upon so many helpless victims.

The whole story of this woman's career is one of strange horror, and the extent and motives of her crime are almost beyond belief. Yet history vouches for the truth of the narrative as above briefly given, and with all its difficulties it cannot be without interest and value as showing the depths and depths of which the human heart is capable.

A PAMPHLET just put forth by the interstate commerce commission gives a list of national, state and local commercial organizations. In this list Utah is only credited with four such organizations, the same being chambers of commerce at Logan, Ogden, Provo and Salt Lake City respectively. In a supplemental list are the names of places from which replies to the commission's circular letters of inquiry were received, stating that such places do not have boards of trade or similar commercial organizations; and of Utah towns only two were courteous enough to get a mention in this class: Park City and Eureka.

Bishop O. A. Smith of the Mormon Church is reported as saying that the report of the Morgan Chapel would be in Mexico and that a peaceful historian, greater than Salt Lake City, would be established. He is also credited with the statement that the Church is growing in numbers and influence.—Exchange.

Who is this Bishop O. A. Smith, and by what signification of words does that Lake City come to be spoken of as a "historian," powerful or otherwise? As to the growth of the Church in numbers and influence—that is something which nobody will doubt or deny.

Real Political Issues

WHILE TRYING TO SOLVE THEM PERSONAL BUSINESS SHOULD ALSO BE REMEMBERED, LIKE JUDGE COLTON AND FOTTERTON PLACE "ALL IN SAFE."

In these days of political strife people are apt to become so complete in discussing the merits of their respective parties and their respective candidates, that they forget business, home and family. Thomas E. Roeber once said to a sermon, "Blessed ones are loved their church that they forget their Christ, and some so loved their party they forget their country!" and the truth of the assertion is very apparent to this city at the present time, and a word of caution may not come amiss, and all those who prefer to back their opinions by a bet, then by an argument, should remember the advice of the game or to be friend to "never make a bet he could not afford to lose," which if properly heeded would make election bets very few this fall. But if you must bet, bet some one of article and not cash, that the winner is in duty bound to Blowers as will be none the better off for having won. We would suggest a Suit of Clothes or an Overcoat (you are not averse to becoming stake-holders.) The winner would be made happier and comfortable, and a respectable appearance when making application for a job in the gift of his favorite candidate, and the loser would not be tied really in paying his wager at the very moderate price for which we are making handsome clothing this fall, and the winner can surely and safely subtract from 20 to more cents—nearly five hundred styles of cloth to select from.
