Thrashing is in progress. On account of the drouth the crops are light. Water has been so scarce that the stream from Thistle creek, flowing from the hills in the east, has barely had strength enough to reach the town.

Bishop Peter Peterson reports that of the sixty-five Indian settlers of 1892, only about twenty are found in Indianola today—one-third of their number having died, and some have gone to Uintah and some to Grass Valley. Of the Indians here there have only been four births in eight years. James Onump is their head man. The Indians seen on the street are well dressed and ride fine fat horss.
