THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

Viewed from the peculiar state of affairs in the country at present, the meeting of the Democratic national convention in Chicago next week, July 7, is the most important of that great political party by a quarter of a century at least. This importance is not measured by the immediate prospect of defeat or victory at the coming election in November as much as by the attitude in which it will place various classes of people in their relation to topics the convention will deal with. The currency problem is the foremost issue, and whether the Democracy will be split up upon that question as badly as the Republicans are in the West, or more so, is a matter now soon to be determined.

There are some reasonable certainties connected with the outlook, and some decided uncertainties; the latter are of course the most interesting. One of the reasonable certainties is that there will be a free coinage plank in the platform. Another is that there will be no "bolt" like that at St. Louis. The silver advocates at St. Louis retired from that convention for the reason that they felt the "sound money" plank would be given full effect in supporting a gold standard. The "sound money" men will not "bolt" at Chicago for the reason that they believe a free coinage plank will not amount to anything of a serious character, if the rest of the convention proceedings can be kept somewhere near in harmony with their views; and if it is not, there is plenty of time to center on a course to pursue whereby the "bolt" will not be from the party but more in the nature of a protest at the polls. As to the uncertain features, these relate to the concessions that must be made to hold the "sound money" wing of the party on election day, and to the candidates that will be named.

The present indications are for a vigorous contest which may be decided quickly in the convention, but which will be carried to the polls. The silver men are confident, and seem to have a clear majority for all purposes; but the gold men are well organized, powerful and determined. The latter may go down in the convention, but if they do it will not be by such an overwhelming majority as overwhelmed the "bolting" St. Louis delegates, or without the fear that those same gold advocates may circumvent the convention's design in the campaign.

Whatever may be done at Chicago, there is every prospect that this year will see three prominent presidential tickets in the field. There is the Republican ticket; the Chicago convention in all probability will name straight Democratic candidates—the only consistent procedure for the party—and there will be the Populist nominees. The last-named party leaders endorsed Senator Teller's candidacy, but the endorsement was not greeted enthusiastically by the rank and file; nor will be that of a silver Democrat. Hence the Populists may be looked to to put up men of their own, to whom support among that are disgruntled with old party procedure will go.

At this point the convention station may be one of whom candidates, and it may be for straight silver, or for free coinage with "waiting" on the nominee. Whatever is done, there will be enough dissatisfaction with it to make the coming campaign "pretty interesting" and it will not be a close shave that the convention will avoid disruption in the party if it manages to do it at all.

THE EXCITEMENT IN HAVANA

As will be remembered, there was quite an excitement in South Germany caused by a speech, at a banquet in Mannheim, during the convention festivities, when the chairman of the committee referred to the German princes as members of the suite of Prince Henry of Prussia and Prince Ludwig of Bavaria before stating that the princes were not of the attendants of the Prussian prince, but vassals of the German emperor, his allies of the empire. The incident caused alarm in a kingdom where, a short time ago, Kaiser William had taken dying exception to a speech made in the committee who made the offensive speech. Naturally enough, a time elapsed before the opponents lived up to the manner in matter of the letter of wearing the insignia of the order of the Red Eagle, but one fact that the emperor after this which happened at Mannheim made him an object of this honor to its Bavaria based upon as a new insult. The Bavarian press treats the matter as such and the people appear to share that view.

The prince regent, Luitpold, has sent his text to allay the feelings among the people, but only with indifferent success. The wire made evident, when at the end of the Bavarian Landtag, the president of the office authorized to proclaim to the Bavarian royal house for its endeavors to preserve the independence of Bavaria and defend its rights. The speech was greeted with prolonged applause, as its allusion to the Mannheim incident became apparent. In addition to the particular sentiment, the speech was a public exercise, with all parts of the country and adherence of empire should be Prince Luitpold.

It is generally noticeable that the Catholic party is taking a great interest in this agitation. Catholic papers are now in strong language for more representation of Bavaria to have Bavarian candidates for the independent Bavarian party. A Bavarian catholic paper predicts for Prince's name nothing can not be the Catholic level of a title.

The present occasion of feeling in Bavaria is taken upon to Berlin as inexplicable. It is clear, however, that it is a symptom of an existing condition that may become grave. In South Germany the strong arm and irreducible spirit of the present emperor have always caused indignation. The people there have grievances, too, among which are the taxes on wine, which fall on the southern sections of the empire entirely, and also the unsatisfactory treatment of the South German railways as compared to that of the Prussian lines. If Emperor William really desires to perpetuate the work of his illustrious grandfather and the equally illustrious chancellor, he must not forget that only the imperial exercise of his power, to the equal benefit of all sections of the country, can secure this end. At first unity was effected in the dazzling rays of military splendor. But this belongs to the past. Unless some stronger means of consolidation be employed, Germany will disunite, as the memory of victories and of heroes becomes dim. Perhaps the present agitation in Bavaria will be a reminder to those in power of the fact that empire-building is a continuous work; that it is not the erection of an Egyptian pyramid, with its huge blocks piled one upon another finally to stand for ages in spite of the ravages of the elements, but the building up of a living organism that needs tender care and judicious treatment for the development of all its parts, of which each one has its own importance for the well-being, the development, the beauty of the whole. If so, all parties will benefit by it.

In the meantime Prince Ludwig has found it convenient to resort to Hungary, probably in order to be out of the way for the ovations the people had intended to give him, as expressions of their approval of his protest in behalf of Bavaria.

THE SALINA CALAMITY.

In Sevier county the Fourth of July was enclosed by a most lamentable occurrence, made doubly regretful by the fact that it was caused, according to the report we have received, by inexcusable recklessness. That improvised apparatus for firing salutes, a couple of anvils, was dangerous at best, as proved on many previous occasions. With one of these a young man wilfully persisted in remaining close to where the people had assembled to celebrate, despite frequent warnings and requests to retire, and at last the result that might have been anticipated came—somebody was hurt; and that somebody was three innocent children, at least two of whom will be maimed for life and one may fill an early grave.

It cannot be said that the official discipline of Salina is entirely without blame in this matter. On the Fourth, officers are as lenient as possible with thoughtless youths who engage in the use of explosives; but the illustration in this case indicates where a distinctive line should be drawn, when official indifference becomes imperative. "Young America" is entitled to all reasonable privileges in displaying enthusiasm on the Fourth. At the same time these people who generally assemble to engage in celebrations have an absolute right to forbid protection. The Salina incident is not the only one which shows this. Other places have had experiences which have taught the lesson that city officials who allow the firing of explosives in close proximity to where people are assembled, are remiss of their duty. When that young man with the anvils was found near to where the audience was gathered, he should have been directed to change his position; failing to obey the order, he should have been summarily removed. For the neglect to impose this latter course, those in charge at the Salina celebration will always be held, in the minds of the people, responsible for the lamentable event of Saturday.

In connection with this matter of officially regulating, so far as practicable, in advance, the firing of explosives on the Fourth, the action of officers of Salt Lake City deserve commendation for its precedent. Where the people are accustomed to engage in such sport, they were reasonably new that sports between under the regulations were satisfied in the coming. There was already a lot of noise of them elsewhere. As a result, there are no casualties to report from this cause. The people involved the protection to which they were entitling and which they pay officers to give them, and the small boy with his toy cannon was not deprived of any privilege to which reasonably entitled, even to blowing his own fingers off if he wanted to, but he was prevented from being a menace to the life and limbs of others. And more officers generally throughout the state do their duty in protecting public assemblies from the unnecessary depredations of youthful "patriots" by requiring the latter to keep a respectable distance with their fireworks, there will be fewer of such painful occurrences as that at Salina, and the Fourth of July will be less of a dread to parents than it is now in some places. Let us hope that all the cities and towns in the State will not require calamitous experiences are they make appropriate regulations on this subject, and enforce them.

OFFICIAL COURTESY.

A great parade like that of Saturday gives opportunity to learn the quality of men called to act as police. As a whole, it may be said in Salt Lake City that those on duty showed themselves to be capable and courteous officers, having due regard for the rights of the citizens, both in and out of the procession, and being considerate of the excitability which sometimes impels people to become confused on such occasions. It may be noted, however, that there were one or two exceptions to this rule; there ways where two or three persons, not fully mindful of the rule that forbids crossing the line of march while the procession was moving, were handled more severely than was justifiable. An officer must do his duty in enforcing rules, but he has no right to get angry and pommel or rudely shake individuals whose failure to "toe the mark" is not caused by a willful disregard of regulations. Official courtesy and vigor go well together, but over-officiousness is not becoming in any public servant.

TRESPASSING ANIMALS.

LOGAN, June 30, 1896.

To the Editor:

Will you kindly, through your valuable paper, tell the people of the country whether or not there has been any legislation in regard to trespassing animals.

We have been informed to-day that the last Legislature passed a law for the purpose whereof trespassing sheep and cattle are unfenced and in counties where there is no fence law, can be seized and pound in the county pound and summarily sold on the damages committed.

Will you kindly let us know whether such a law exists or not, and cause, if one has long for the edition of the law [illegible] opinion, that the people may understand it, and govern themselves accordingly, and very much oblige.

Very respectfully yours,
J. E. WHITNEY.

In answer to the foregoing we refer the inquirer to page 552 of the Laws of Utah for 1896, Sections 7, 8, 9 and 10 read as follows:

TRESPASSING ANIMALS.

Sec. 7. Any county or precinct thereof in the State may, at any general or special election called for that purpose by the board of county commissioners, by a majority vote of all the legal voters of such county or precinct, declare in favor of fencing their farms and allowing their animals to run at large; and in such cases the provisions of this act, authorizing the detention of such animals for damages shall be inoperative.

Sec. 8. It shall be the duty of the board of county commissioners, immediately after the passage of this act, to declare by ordinance what shall constitute a lawful fence for that county, and the fence viewers for that county shall be governed thereby.

Sec. 9. If any neat cattle, horses, asses, mules, sheep, goats or swine shall trespass or do damage upon the premises of any other person, except in cases where such places are not enclosed by a lawful fence, in counties where a fence is required by law, the party aggrieved, whether he be the owner or occupant of such premises, may recover damages by an action at law against the owner of the trespassing animals, or by distraining and impounding said animals in the manner provided herein; provided, that in cases where an action is brought for the recovery of such damages, some of the animals trespassing shall be exempt from execution, and provided further that no fees in such cases shall be levied against the fees in other cases.

Sec. 10. The owner or occupant of any property may restrain or of said animals trespassing or doing damage thereon. He shall, within twenty-four hours thereafter, deliver said animals to the pound-keeper of the precinct, together with a certificate of the appraisement of the damage done by said animals. Such appraisement must be made by some disinterested householder, a few hours after taking up the property of the person damaged, the name of the owner of the animals, if known, and if not known, a description of the animals, together with a description of the animals, including all visible marks and brands. If the animals appear to be owned by different parties, a separate appraisement shall be made of the damage done by the use or occupation of animals which appear to belong to each of the different owners, and a separate certificate of appraisement shall be made for each appraisement. In case some the owners shall be notified in person and each one of proper of animals shall be advertised and sold separately in the same manner as though the damage had been done by different animals of different kinds.

The foregoing sections are the most important of the statutes the repealed; and are more devoted to the manner of enforcing the right and are to be brought for quotation.

This seems to be full protection to people owning large or small tracts of land in any county where there is no "fence law." It is something new in the legislation of this State and will have a tendency to make men think twice before the herds of cattle who are with them, owners the same as members of the same household.

The News committee have seen informed in relation of the provisions of this law, which was published in full in the daily editions of May 19, in the semi-weekly of May 22, and the weekly of May 23. The law went into effect June 1st.
