THE COUNCIL MEETING.

Tuesday evening's session of the City Council had further matters of general interest to the taxpayers. There was Treasurer May's bond, brought into notice by a resolution calling for new security from that official. It is well understood that the claim is set forth that Mr. May's present bond is not as good as it might be, as it rules to the people of Salt Lake City instead of to the municipal corporation, but since it is the people or the inhabitants of the city who are constituted the body corporate, and that form of bond was passed upon by a careful and competent attorney who filled the position of mayor in the last administration, there does not seem to be much point to the objection. There appears to be another deficiency in the bond, however, which should be corrected or the want supplied by requiring the treasurer's deputies to give bonds. At present Treasurer May's bond includes only himself and affords at least an opportunity to escape responsibility for acts of his subordinates.

Another item was the resolution allowing licenses and taxes to be paid in warrants. No doubt this will act as injurious to the resolution indicated, in permitting the buying up of warrants at a discount so that a few licenses and taxpayers will save a little. But the loss is not the city's; and if employes can do better by disposing of their warrants at a slight loss than by holding them, there appears as good reason why they should not be given as good opportunity as possible to convert their holdings into cash. Under other circumstances where special conditions intervene, another view might be taken.

The proposed reduction of water rates is a very important proposition, and there are arguments to present on either side. One class of times is of an emergency character, and in favor of the city's getting as much cash as it can out of the people from any source. On the other hand, justice to the residents of the city says that for all domestic uses the water should be supplied at the lowest possible rate. The matter now being in the hands of the committee on waterworks, it is hoped that body will give it thorough consideration and decide on the right thing.

The action in relation to the superintendent of waterworks also is important. There is the peculiar proceeding of holding an appointment in abeyance till, as a member, stated "a certain matter" is attended to. This is understood to be an increase of $1,000 in the salary of the chairman of the board of public works, and the intimation is that the delay of the appointment is a lash over the Council to compel it to make the increase. The law gives the Mayor the right to make certain appointments, subject to the approval of the Council; but there is no provision of the statute allowing the creation of an "acting" official, and proceeding independent of the Council. Some of the Council say they want to inquire into this exercise of legislative power.

The other business may be regarded as of less moment; still there were several items that should not be lost sight of as gathered, which first action thereon by the Council cause to be taken.

LONDON AND SALT LAKE.

Black and White is the name of one of the best illustrated weekly papers in Europe. It is published in the British capital, and is the great rival of the London Illustrated News. In its issue of Saturday, July 4, Black and White devoted a page of the illustrations to Salt Lake City and vicinity, evidently taken from a book of views issued by an enterprising Salt Lake firm. The illustrations include a general view of the city, also pictures of the Eagle Gate, the Temple Block, the Tabernacle, Municipal Buildings (city and county building), and other places of note, including The Hotel, by which is meant the great pavilion of Saltair. The paper has no attempt at descriptive text, except the following paragraph:

> On the next page will be found sketches of Salt Lake City, the home of the Mormons, whose new temple now stands on the Mormon Centre. The history of the place and its peculiar community is familiar to many who know nothing at all of the details. Even those who have read it will be more than repaid by a glance at the illustrations, and the many of us who are interested in proceeding on the road to Klondyke.

Black and White's statement of the admission of Salt Lake City into the American Union is not a copy of the types, but an illustration of the imperfect knowledge concerning this locality, even on the part of a great paper. There seems to be no conception of the fact that Salt Lake City is not the capital of the State of Utah which was admitted to the Union, and which is larger in area than England, has hundreds of miles of railroad, and is inhabited by those who in civilization, intelligence and the science of a Christian people are the peer of any community on earth. Black and White is a good place to get some work displayed, in a sensational setting, the magnificence of Ogden, Provo, Logan and other cities in common with Salt Lake. If this were done, with information pertaining thereto given to counteract that such as the paper would allow space for, in time there would be less real truth in Black and White's "bull" that the history of this place and its people "is familiar to many who know nothing at all" about us. When the masses of London's population know something of actual conditions here they will have very different views than those which now prevail to a marked extent.

THE ZIONISTS.

To the Lafferty Saints, as is Christians in general, the agitation now going on for the colonization of Palestine by the descendants of its ancient inhabitants is of much interest. The Jews have from their first appearance on the stage of human history held a prominent and important role, and their reappearance on the scene is regarded by believers in the inspiration of the approaching climax in the present act of the great world-drama, and the commencement of a new era—new in every respect.

A writer in Harper's Weekly points out that the movement for the restoration of the Jews in our day has assumed such a tangible form as to command attention. The Zionists, as the movers in the cause are called, have become a power. Their efforts have already resulted in the establishment of fully three dozen Jewish colonies in Palestine with more than four thousand colonists, and they have the support of such prominent bankers as the Rothschilds, which is proof enough that the phenomenon is one of great moment.

The Zionist movement owes its origin to the persecution of the Jews in Russia and Roumania. This, says the writer in Harper's Weekly, aroused among the eastern Israelites a phenomenal enthusiasm for a return to the Holy Land. Societies were organized, moneys were secured, and colonies were sent out. As early as 1884 the Russian Zionists held a national congress at Kattowitz, where was founded the Mazkeline association, later reorganized, with the sanction of the government, as a Palestine Agricultural association. The central seat is at Odessa, and a representative committee sits at Jaffa, where also the organ of the society is published.

The plans of the associates have been carefully matured. Among their ideas is also the establishment of the Hebrew as the language of the Israelites. The Jaffa school for boys and girls is almost a Hebrew college; money for a Hebrew university in Palestine is reported to be forthcoming. The beginnings of a national Hebrew library at Jaffa have been made largely through donations from prominent Jewish scholars. A regular Hebrew literature is being developed. Not only are the standard works of Humboldt, Schiller, Goethe, Shakespeare and others being translated, but also original Hebrew works, especially in poetry, belle-letters, fiction, are attracting the attention of the literary world. Among Jewish lyrics writers Jehuda Gordon and Maps deserve special mention. Jewish political papers, such as Hammagid (The Reporter), begun in 1860; Hamaggid (The Interpreter), begun in 1881, both weeklies, as also the scientific journal, Hashachar (The Morning Dawn), first issued in 1868, have already an international reputation. By attending these means and mediums the Zionists are doing through work to educate their people and enthuse them for their project.

Besides this movement there is another, created by a Russian lawyer, Hokinson, and which may be called Jewish-Christian. Hokinson aims at the establishment of a Jewish community acknowledging Jesus the Messiah, but retaining such Jewish features as the circumcision and the Sabbath. He is also laboring for the revival of the Hebrew language. There is at least one Jewish-Christian colony in Palestine.

There can be no doubt that the restoration of the Jews to the land of their fathers is one of the features of the present time, the importance of which was never better realized than by the national writer who said: "If the leading away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?"

THE FIRST OF JULY.

In all its aspects the storm on Tuesday was perhaps the most determined and carefully planned in the times. Fire in the city, the welcome to most people, and had it generally subsided all would be well. But twenty-five years ago, which we did not seem to be remembered outside, even Wilford the lion remembered, and when it comes to a knowledge of the fact that it cost three lives and close to $100,000 property, it would have been easy to dispense with this latter claim, as far as any remedy for it appears. The ordinary precautions against such events would not have been available in preventing all damage, even if they had been in force, though they would have modified it in places where they could have been applied and were not. The loss of life particularly is lamentable, and the destruction of property will be very severe upon some claimants.

THE GOLD GOING.

It would not be surprising if the rumored new loan of $200,000,000 in gold to Russia should prove true. Such an event would have a telling effect on finance in this country, and in several European nations as well, through withdrawing that much more gold from circulation. The procedure would be in perfect harmony with Russian financial policy since the days of Peter the Great; and whether or not the Rothschilds will withdraw their gold from this country at the date to equip Russia, the ultimate test of their doing so is only a question of time. The Muscovite is hoarding up gold, and now has a reserve of $600,000,000 which cannot be reached, and would be touched by Russia only in the event of some great emergency. In connection with this gold movement it is a notable fact that the government of the czars has never taken a backward step in its financial policy since Peter the Great gave it an impetus, a steady forward movement has been followed till now the nation stands as the wonder in Europe, Great Britain alone excepted. With another influx of gold out of this country, such as this movement presages, the necessity for rehabilitating silver as a standard of values may be much more deeply impressed on the American people than it is now.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATIONS.

It may not be readily comprehended that the great city of Cleveland, Ohio's second city in size, is still less than 100 years old; yet such is the case, although next week will witness the falling out of the century since General Moses Cleveland, of Connecticut, landed at the mouth of the Cuyahoga river, where it empties into Lake Erie, and founded the city which now bears his name. General Cleveland's landing was made on July 22, 1796; a third of a century later, in 1826, the population of Cleveland was 1,075 souls; during the next two-thirds of the century the increase has been to more than 250 times that number, and on July 22, the city of Cleveland will commence its centennial celebration.

Beginning on Sunday next with religious services, memorial addresses and historical sermons in which every religious organization will take part, there will be something of interest every day leading up to the first great event of the celebration, the grand parade of Wednesday, commemorating the landing of Moses Cleveland and his party in the Cuyahoga river one hundred years before. Preparations for this pageant have been going on for many weeks and nothing is being left undone that is calculated to insure its success. So far as can now be judged, the display on founders' day, July 22, will eclipse everything that ever has been seen in Cleveland. In the afternoon of Friday, July 24, there will be another novel and impressive display feature of which is a bicycle parade, in which many thousands of bicycle riders have promised to take part. Other events will fill out the week. In the week following there will be "women's day," gatherings in commemoration of the early settlers of the Western Reserve, a second bicycle parade, and throughout the week the more of the Cleveland Driving Park association. Then there will be a rest of a couple of weeks before the next series of centennial celebration events begins.

It was not far from where the city of Cleveland stands that the prediction was first made, more than sixty years ago, regarding the settlement of Utah's vales by the Mormon people. This region was then indistinctly referred to as the Rocky Mountains, and the Prophet Joseph Smith gave to interested searchers the information that the Latter-day Saints as a people would occupy those valleys—a prediction fulfilled in less than a score of years after it was made, yet apparently an impossibility at the time the Prophet spoke. And while the rapid growth of this city is indicated by the progress Cleveland has made the century, that growth pales into little insignificance in the change which has taken place in the Salt Lake Valley in the last half century. Thousands gather now to celebrate the distance between Utah and Ohio, when men are still living who journeyed each other. The year a great step in the direction of the nineteenth and 1896 marks a great step in the other hemisphere, marking anniversary, a century in less duration, and in the same month; and the story of each of these events is very similar in each place. The date in history show it to be quite a young country when such events are counted, but the celebrations thereof tell how great the country has become.
