The New Chapter in the Beecher-Tilton Scandal, by Mix.

NEW YORK, 2.—The long promised new chapter in the Beecher-Tilton scandal appears this morning over the signature of James B. Mix, something of whose revelations were foreshadowed in the New York dispatches of the 2nd of May.

Mix opens by declaring his purpose to give a true statement of what he believes to be the origin, progress, and denouement of a gigantic and elaborate plot concocted by a clique of free love propagandists, their object the ruin of Beecher. The story begins early in 1870, when Tilton, Moulton, and Mix were all neighbors in Brooklyn Heights. Himself and Tilton were schoolboy friends, and grew up together. Tilton at a very early age developed an inordinate and impure fondness for female society in such a marked degree, as excited ridicule, despite his scholarly aptitude, which challenged general admiration.

In 1874 two coteries of social reformers attracted attention. Both had conventions favoring women's rights, one meeting at Steinway's and the other at Apollo Hall. Beecher presided at the former, which included such women as Grace Greenwood and Lucretia Mott. Tilton presided over the other, which included Victoria Woodhull, and was denounced for free love theories. At this time a conspiracy was organized to secure Beecher as high priest of the free love movement, or else to so compromise him as to compel his cooperation. The originators of the plot, Mix says, were Tilton and three women not named, because he reveals no woman's name unless she has already been before the public as implicated with Tilton.

Mr. Mix proceeds to narrate the proceeding of the free love coterie. The butt of all the women was Elizabeth Tilton. In the presence of a certain one of them whose edict was law, she gave up all claim to her husband, and when she remained all night at Tilton's house, which she frequently did, Elizabeth abandoned her sobs on the bosom of her poor blind aunt who slept in the basement. It was at the time of these doings that the Apollo Hall Convention was held and soon afterwards the plot against Beecher was organized. A combination of circumstances originally led Mix into its hatching house and brought him into frequent contact with the parties interested. He charges that Tilton's intimacy with Victoria Woodhull was formed for the purpose of using her as one of his instruments against Beecher. About the 1st of May, 1871, Mix was sent by the Tribune office to obtain from Woodhull a file of her weekly. On that occasion after waiting half an hour or more, he met Tilton emerging from her private room. This was long prior to the date of his intimacy with Woodhull's testified to at the Beecher trial. The acquaintance between Woodhull thus begun, was long continued, and resulted in his knowledge of many facts having an important bearing. The use made to Woodhull's advantage of the files borrowed by him drew out her explanation, showing that Tilton had already become so intimate as to be received in her boudoir.

He narrates various incidents to show that it contained, despite Woodhull's declaration, that another literary woman and reformer, with whom Mix had seen him at Long Branch, was his affinity, and despite Tilton's wife's indignant refusal during the summer of 1871, to accompany himself and Woodhull in a drive. For a long time Tilton and Woodhull were inseparable sometimes at night as well as day.

In early fall of 1871 Tilton inflicted upon Mix a disgusting panegyric of Woodhull, denouncing her detractors, and declaring his breast should be her shield, and he would smite all creation but that they should respect her. In April, 1872, Tilton realized that he had been fooled by Woodhull and was pursuing a phantom.

Up to this time no intimation of infidelity by Mrs. Tilton had emanated from any quarter except the Woodhull. Mix left Tilton's presence in a great quandry, and began to suspect him of concocting a plan against Beecher. Since then Mix has ascertained that for five months Tilton and Moulton, at every offered opportunity, brought somebody to the house to hear the true story.

Among these was Ethan Allen, the reputable New York lawyer, who was also Tilton's schoolmate; this was on the day of Greeley's funeral. Allen was for war, but Moulton opposed him, and reproached him for such council. Allen getting some light from Mix never helped the conspirators as they desired. At his request I copied a brief note, the original of which I have in his handwriting, wherein I was made to suggest the propriety of a formal denial of the calumny. He then drew from his dressing gown a four paged letter, the original of which I have in his handwriting, and signed by him; also an introduction to the letter for publication, likewise in his hand writing. This letter was to be inserted in all the papers that would print it in New York and Brooklyn, and was also to be given to the associated press agents. I agreed to carry out his instructions provided his wife approved of his course. He remarked that he would not think of taking such a step without it was her desire. Accordingly I handed it to Kennard Philip, of the Brooklyn Eagle, a copy of which appeared the day the letter was written, December 27th, 1872, in that paper. I was chagrined when I discovered that Mrs. Tilton had been very much effected by the appearance of the letter, so much so she was sick from mental anguish.

On December 31st, Tilton wrote to another mythical friend a long letter, which was subsequently deemed worthy of a place on Moulton's long statement, where it was produced, with the suggestion that it was not written for publication. Mix intimated broadly that this letter was written to some lady admirer, who was visiting his house at the time of writing, and because of whose presence his wife was again sleeping in the basement. Mix interviewed Moulton on the subject of the Woodhull letters. Moulton prevaricated by saying he did not know of ever having written to Woodhull. Mix replied to Moulton: It would seem that Tilton put up the job to inveigle Beecher to his house, where the Woodhull was to be, and you were to execute it. But you were unable to carry it out. This was the job put up by Tilton and Moulton to get Beecher to introduce Woodhull at Steinway Hall, on November 20, 1871, and which was a failure. Moulton's parting words were that he hoped Victoria would do nothing unhandsome, and endeavor to get Woodhull to destroy all these letters, 100 or more, but she insisted that some day they might be useful to her or myself. I was satisfied that Tilton had written the complaining friend a letter to keep the scandal alive, and thereby obtain money.

On Sunday, May 4th, 1873, the "Thunderbolt" appeared in a Brooklyn paper extra. This was a synopsis of Tilton's true story. I went to see Tilton at once, and he said he had not seen the papers, and asked what news. I told him. Then he began his heroics, and asked, "whom can I trust?" The passage alluding to Beecher's proposal to his wife he indignantly disclaimed, notwithstanding he had read those selfsame passages to me from his own manuscript. He crowned his lying and poltroonry by remarking that in one of my convivial moods I had perhaps given the "true story" away. A letter now in my possession will prove that Tilton induced a gentleman in Hartford to copy his "True story" for publication in a distant city. The letters which Beecher wrote to Woodhull were simply refusals on his part to countenance or aid her, though she showed the signatures and made improper use of them. Moulton, on the 13th of July, went before Plymouth investigating committee and read a statement. It was evident that at the eleventh hour he had determined to bone Tilton to fight it out himself. That night Tilton and Moulton had a lively scrimmage. The lie was given, and as they were about to come together, Moulton's wife got between them, and ordered Tilton out, saying that she would send for a policeman if he refused. Soon afterwards the Chicago Tribune correspondent called on Tilton, and began copying Tilton's wife's letters. Tilton, by clever strategem, again involved Moulton in his plot through this correspondent. Mix reviews, at considerable length the Beecher trial and gives some reasons why certain witnesses were not called.

Terrible Loss of Life and Property by a Cyclone.

RICHMOND, Va., 2.—A terrific cyclone passed over this place about four o'clock this evening, levelling to the ground over half the buildings in town. Over 100 houses were totally destroyed, and the loss to property will reach a quarter of a million. Whole blocks were completely swept away, and the debris scattered for miles. The storm came from the south-west, passed to the north-east, and was preceded by a heavy fall of rain. Trees were uprooted and carried through the air like a feather, as was also fragments of houses, and, in fact, every thing that the storm struck. The Shaw House, a large brick hotel, was demolished and the inmates buried in the ruins. Horses and stock of all kinds in the track of the storm were swept off the face of the earth. A train load of citizens of Lexington, arrived to render aid, and physicians from all the surrounding towns have been summoned to give medical attendance to the wounded.

Description of the Cyclone.

ST. LOUIS, 2.—The Times has additional specials from Richmond, Mo., which say: The cyclone, yesterday, was the color of steam, at times a funnel-shaped cloud would break or open in places, emit what appeared like black smoke, then gather together again, and with increased force, continue on in its march of destruction. At first it approached slowly; not faster perhaps than a man could walk, then moved faster, levelling everything in its path with the ground, producing almost complete devastation. The sound produced was infernal, resembling that of a great cataract. The debris of the city has been found fourteen miles away. A perfect panic prevailed for a time, but order and comparative calm was restored, and the killed and wounded were provided for. The unharmed houses of citizens were thrown open for the reception of the homeless sufferers, and every attention possible given to them. The funeral of several of the victims took place this morning. The remains of Captain Jacobs were found this morning buried in the ruins. Judge Donaldson, who was reported wounded last night, is dead, making, so far, 15 deaths. The death of several others is momentarily expected. At least 40 persons are seriously or mortally wounded.

Advices from the county, on the track of the storm northward, are that the growing crops were badly injured, trees prostrated, stock killed, and bridges blown down, but no houses are reported destroyed or lives lost.

A Summer Campaign and Scouting Party.

CHEYENNE, Wyo, 2.—General Bradley's command, consisting of five companies and the headquarters of the Third Cavalry and four companies, left Fort Laramie, yesterday morning, for the Little Missouri River, where they will establish a summer camp, and scout the country north of the Black Hills. The Third Cavalry is commanded by Colonel Carlton, Lieutenant Capron, Quartermaster. The command is accompanied by a wagon train consisting of 70 wagons and a pack train of 120 mules. General Bradley will be joined by the Arapahoe scouts while en route. Baptiste, who recently had charge of the Sioux Indian soldiers at the new Red Cloud agency, will act as chief scout, guide and interpreter.

General Merritt's command, consisting of eight companies of the Fifth Cavalry, will reach Fort McKinney to-morrow, and will inaugurate a summer campaign therefrom, and at once establish a new post at a point not yet determined.

Robbers Captured.

The four men who robbed the United States train a few days ago, were captured, to-day, by Sheriff Rankin, in a cañon near where the Medicine Bow empties into the North Platte, and are now at St. Mary's station, on the U. P. railroad, their names are John Thomas, Wm. Henry, D. H. Hill, and W. A. Gibson.

How the Republicans Feel About the Fraud Investigation.

WASHINGTON, 2.—Cool-headed republicans, to-night, are taking a much more cheerful view of the nature and effects of Anderson's testimony before the Potter investigating committee than was prevalent yesterday. They find, upon comparison, that a number of yesterday's statements are directly contradicted by the testimony given by him before the Louisiana returning board, and also before the Senate committee, of which Howe was chairman. They also claim that the only thing in Anderson's testimony inconsistent with this theory of Sherman's purpose is Anderson's unsupported statement that he told Sherman in a public restaurant that his protest, previously filed, was false. This they denounce as improbable and unworthy of belief if met by Sherman's denial. On the other hand many republicans are of the opinion that the present state of the case wears a very damaging aspect for Secretary Sherman and Senator Matthews, and that they will find great difficulty in clearing up their connection with Anderson, and Louisiana affairs generally, to the satisfaction of the public mind. Upon Anderson's own showing, however, the action of the returning board was legally justified, and hence no progress has yet been made towards overturning Hayes' legal title to the presidency.

Indians on the War Path.

CHICAGO, 2.—A telegram received, at the military headquarters, from the department of the Pacific, states that the Bannock Indians of Big Camas Prairie are out upon the war path, with 200 well-armed warriors. Two settlers have been wounded. About 60 lodges have been joined to them, and all have gone into camp. United States troops have been sent to protect the settlers.

FOREIGN.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Steamer Ashore.

LIVERPOOL, 2.—The Williams & Guion steamer Idaho went ashore on Saturday in a fog, near Koningberg light ship, on the coast of Ireland, and afterwards foundered. The crew and passengers were saved.

GERMANY.

Another Attempt to Assassinate the Emperor William.

BERLIN, 2.—While the Emperor was taking a drive, this afternoon, some shots, apparently proceeding from a house in the Avenue Unter Der Linden, were fired at him. The Emperor was wounded in one arm and on the cheek by buckshot and small shot. The would-be assassin is a Dr. Nobeling, occupying apartments at No. 18, Unter Der Linden. When his door was forced open he fired upon and wounded the hotel-keeper, and tried to commit suicide, but was secured. The Emperor's personal attendant jumped into the carriage and supported the Emperor until the carriage reached the palace. The Emperor was conveyed to bed, and several grains of shot were extracted, causing great loss of blood. The Emperor suffered great pain, but never lost consciousness. At 7 o'clock this evening, no serious apprehensions were felt as to his condition.
