A NOVEL GUARANTEE.

A COMPANY THAT FURNISHES CERTIFICATES TO WIDOWS.

A Note to the Boy Who Was a Big Magnetic Sniper—Some Use made of the Will It Not Prove to Intending Owner of Whom Something Was Known.

Feeling the ice over Sixteenth I asked, "If you wish to make with the goodness, sir," said the young man to Frank, "you will find him in the private office," and thinking that I entered the new room, where a gleaming head was greeted me cordially.

"Won't you be seated?" he said, pressing me to the lounge. "It was fortunate—wonderfully lucky!"

"Is it all?" I laughed. "As I was passing by I noticed I would come in and inquire into the nature and scope of the Lovers' Guarantee company, which I too seemed an extension."

"Certainly," he responded. "I shall be only too glad to explain to you. We are here for the Lovers' Guarantee company was formed for the purpose of insuring good husbands to all women matrimonially inclined, and the great success we have met with goes far proves that there existed a need for our existence. The average man of affairs has little time to look up the character and antecedents of the young fellow who applies for his daughter's hand. We look into it, and if he is not what we say he is, we tell him so, and offer him a certificate guaranteeing him to be all that he claims. This keeps her from being married to a rascal. A man's financial ability is of course not to determine, but it is for the free exercise of character that we are interested particularly. Our certificate is no absolute guarantee of the man. Of course we have to be particular, for should the wife at any time make upon a separation and show cause under the contract we would have to pay all her legal expenses and look after her a new husband or make over to her certain payments."

"But suppose," said I, "after the man is married off, there develops some hidden vice, some idiosyncrasy that causes unhappiness, but no separation, what do you do then?"

"Such cases," replied the president of the Lovers' Guarantee company, "are rare, but of course they do occur. In a case like this we examine into the cause of the difficulty, and if the man be wrong the fact that he has a wife good given is a power over him, and generally we bring him to terms."

"But," said I, "suppose the woman is the one to wrong?"

"This," explained the president, "is extremely unfortunate, as we have no means of making her stick, having no power over her. We can, however, advise the man what to do, generally with most fabulous results. As a rule, these differences come from ignorance on both sides. Where they are extreme and a separation is advisable we have to use caught the best lawyers, and divorces are obtained in the most private way.

"We have in our employ one of the most eminent physiologists in the country, who examines the hearts of all applicants. Our medical advisers, who are in a large practice to some with us, has a growing staff of assistants, and these look carefully into the physical condition of the applicants. You may depend upon it that when an applicant has successfully run the gauntlet we lay out for him he will make a good husband. We advise all young married people to have homes of their own, to scatter love benefits, and have a home heaven through which a mother can obtain advice on the most desirable way to live, the best locations, a list of houses and apartments and the lowest rents. By this means we are enabled to make so acquainted with landlords as that our patrons can obtain certain discounts and privileges. Want you thinking—about—of entering upon the same life?"

"Oh, no," I replied hesitantly. "I am already married, sir," I added longingly. "I don't suppose cases of divorce come under your jurisdiction?"

"Indeed they do," replied the president of the Lovers' Guarantee company. "We have lately formed a department for the benefit of married people and find it to be a good success. For a small sum yearly, in advance, we furnish to them with advice as to the proper management of husbands and show them how to act in special emergencies. For instance, should a husband be called away on frequently at night on business, holding no fear—I mean no fear to our wives—we furnish them with a special card which he employs on such occasions.

"Should any of your wives, sir, ever need our services, we will be glad to have you to join. We make their interests our own, and we do our best to make the home so comfortable that they will have a tendency to bring him to his senses."

"My dear sir," said I warmly as I rose to go, "you are accomplishing a great work, and I am glad I called to see you. I shall be pleased to tell my friends about so great a work when we employ our services."

"Thank you," he said, "but wait! you mind giving me your name? I always like to find out the names of all our visitors."

"Certainly not," said I. "I would put as soon as any, so as to be on possible. Place want to advise with you regarding lots on 'Ze Avenue, sir, in Winnetka."

A bright and engaging smile crossed the face of the president of the Lovers' Guarantee company. "Oh, you're dead," he exclaimed. "Go back Wilber by, you're in!"

"Take it," I replied, comfortably, a lump rising in my throat. "I'm not afraid, sir, that you make no money."

"Very nicely," he responded, smilingly as he wrote, and handed me presently a card. "Take this, sir, to Mr. Wilber, and you will be all right. Good day, sir. Yes, I am Mr. Hyland, Dick's Christian."

"Take with me to lose not under my name?"—J. Smith Wilbur in New York World.
