NO BACKWARD STEPS.

There is such a thing as liberality in expenditure being real economy, and excessive economy amounting to actual extravagance. A happy medium exists and can be found by those who bring thought and judgment to the solution of the question. Retrenchment, where the reduction of expenses will not impair the efficiency of the service and retard necessary improvements, should be the watchword, now that times are hard and money scarce, with those who choose public funds as well as with those who have only personal concerns to control. But parsimony to the extent of hurtful retrogression should be as carefully avoided as the other extreme, otherwise of the two it may become when the greater evil.

It has been the hope that in the choice of municipal officers for the next two years, Salt Lake City would choose men who were able to grasp the whole situation and exercise prudence and discrimination in administering the affairs of the city. We do not think that, to so far as the wishes of the majority of the people were made effective, any mistake occurred. The successful candidates realize that the recent revolt against organized misgovernment means city improvement, not retrogression. Much use has been made of the prediction that a vote for the Citizens' ticket was a vote for a step backward. That this statement was a stupid falsehood the News believes, and it expects the men chosen by the Citizens' party, if party it can be called, to nail the falsehood and put the calamity croakers to open shame.

THE SANDWICH ISLAND RUMOR.

President Cleveland has been deliberating upon the Hawaiian revolution a long time, and if he has indeed come to the conclusion that Liliokalani was wrongfully dethroned, there must have been some very important facts collected by Minister Blount in addition to any yet made public. The charge made by the revolutionists that the queen undertook by highhanded measures to set up a new constitution was practically admitted by her own representative. The causes for the evident state of exasperation under which she acted may have been many and provoking, but they would count as nothing in her defense. Anger is not a recognized quantity in the government of a state, and she should have kept that fact better in view. She appears upon the face of the evidence to have launched a paper revolution among brokers which completely demolished the little craft before it could even hoist sail.

But the Washington authorities may have the best of reasons for the position taken as reported some days ago. In any event there are embarrassing features in the case which will justify the President in the free exercise of all the caution he may please to take in the premises. It was undoubtedly through the chance old given without proper authority by the minister and troops of the United States that the affair resulted as it did. And that the President could safely and consistently use the power of the United States government in reversing the conditions thus created is a question not to be negatived without all the evidence. It is the mission of this Republic among the nations to advance the cause of liberty to the fullest extent of which moral science is capable. As for acquiring possession of the Sandwich Islands or of any other country, that is not essential to such a cause. In deciding upon a question of annexation, it would usually be a mistake to give the speculative interests of a few of the political leaders too prominent consideration. It might lead to very grave errors which would be more destructive than permanent at home liberty.

SALVATIONIST CONGRESS.

New York city is to have a congress of religionists. It is to continue in session for seven days. It will not be marked with as much adversity and condition as were exhibited in the religious congress at Chicago, though it may possess equal sincerity, and is likely to be more vituperative on its sessions. It is designated the Salvation Army Columbian Congress. Ballington Booth, son of the army leader and technical commander of the organization in America, is to preside. Hundreds of delegates from other centers of the Union will be present, and Commissioner George Scott Railton, who is called the founder of the Army in America, has come all the way from Germany to be in attendance. He is officially as the Army's leader in the kaiser's dominions. Lord Rabiah Pan, leader of the Salvationist forces in India, is also to be present. Monster mass meetings and street parades are to be among the features of the great gathering whereby Gotham is to be roused from its non-religious apathy. But the great city has had many "spiritual" experiences, and it is doubtful if even the Salvationists can engage much attention there for any protracted period.

PROGRESS AND DYNAMITE.

The horrifying account from Barcelona of the hurling of a dynamite bomb from the gallery of a theater into the crowded house below, appears in point of direction brutality to be distinctly in the lead of anything yet recorded of these grim avengers. According to the dispatch the shell in which the bomb exploded was occupied by a family party, fifteen of whom were mangled almost beyond recognition, such a deed as this is the utterly diabolical to account to normal human beings as we have learned to know them. It is not strange that civilization stands aghast before such horrors. It is not a case for a competent estimate of the creature it is confronted with. He is far too clever to be classed with common murders, and yet his deeds have no parallel among those of rational murderers. They are ninety now, and whether the product of villainy under high pressure, of fiend's own invention, they cannot run very much longer without demanding some pretty vigorous action on the occasion. Whether these monsters of crime are another race of beings or simply a scientific development of the old stock of villains, they are clearly a distinct class of criminals and will have to be dealt with as such. If it is the product of science that has brought such beings into life, a new and radical progress in the art of bringing murderers to justice will have to come forward and take care of them. When anarchy becomes synonymous with bomb-throwing—as it seems to be at present—the armed members of the order will have to be viewed in the light of confessed murderers to be hunted down and treated as such by the law.

WE ARE BETTER OFF.

Notwithstanding the general complaint of hard times, for which there is in many instances good ground, the people of Utah are infinitely better off than the working classes in some other parts where heretofore these classes believed they were getting on nicely. This knowledge with respect to England may be gleaned from missionaries returning from that land to Utah this fall, as well as from letters and papers received.

A few weeks ago the News made brief mention of the distressing conditions in Birmingham and various places in Warwickshire and in Sheffield and the surrounding district in Yorkshire. Elder Henry Harker, who just returned from England, as noted in the News last autumn, describes the situation as little if any better in Nottinghamshire. He has been traveling in that part and has been intimately associated with mechanics and the laboring classes for the past two years, and states that their condition this season is deplorable. A vast number of people have been thrown out of work by the dispute with the miners, as briefly noted in the dispatches some weeks since. In consequence of this the miners and their families have been on the verge of starvation. Since the lockout there are a great many who have been unable to procure sufficient food to satisfy the cravings of hunger, but who have been kept on scant rations from day to day.

This social state of things is not limited to coal miners and their families, but extends to those engaged in other branches of industry, men, women and children. Factories and workshops are closed down or working on part time owing to the scarcity of coal, and the employes of such institutions and those dependent on them are no better off than are the miners. Altogether the condition of the working people is described as most distressing while the more well to do are holding together firmly to achieve their purpose of reducing the cost of coal production by a reduction in the price of the wages of miners and others.

It may be that the government in Great Britain will be called to interfere in the dispute as it did in the case of the great strike two years ago. Then the coal miners, who were at that time getting fair wages in England, refused to accept a proposed reduction and work was stopped. The miners had not reason to carry on the miners' long, and as they saw weather the silent storm increased the prospects of the proposed reduction to more than what it was at first. The employes had not will gave a number of people were injured in the government in saving starved to death. The official intervention came in the way of high dignitaries of the Church of England being at a loss with the Masters' Association—an organization which the greater portion of large employers in England belong to—until finally a compromise was offered on a basis of a little more than the original reduction proposed.

The people of Utah have reason to congratulate themselves that they are not liable to such conditions as those described as now existing in parts of England. As a body they are much better off than the workmen there, on account of their being their ability and previous information to put some of their earnings away "for a rainy day"—a thing that is almost thought of by the English workman except as a matter of money.

THE DUTCH AS DIPLOMATISTS.

The selection of James J. Van Alen of Newport as ambassador to Italy—his diplomatic ability and experience having contributed to giving a check for $50,000 in the Democratic campaign last fall—has been commented upon in these columns. The strictures made on that appointment will also be appropriate on that of James Roosevelt-Roosevelt as secretary of the American legation at London. Mr. Roosevelt's sole qualification, so far as known, was also the giving of a check to Mr. Cleveland's campaign fund—$10,000 was the figure we believe. The young match has been confirmed all right, and it has been already gone to his new station. He doubtless will come in for all of which is fashionable and some of bore.

But there is a point in this affair that will bear a moment's scrutiny. Van Alen is a son-in-law of the Astors, an association by marriage with all the millions of dollars controlled by that old New Amsterdam family. Roosevelt (if the reader desires accuracy he should pronounce the name twice in rapid succession) is also a son-in-law of the same illustrious house. The selection of two such specimens by Mr. Cleveland might be deemed a mere coincidence were it not for one fact. When Mr. Harrison was in the White House it was another old New Amsterdam family of ancient pedigree and abundant gold that had the call on executive smiles. The Vanderbilts were generous to his campaign fund, were proud of his friendship and looked in the direction of his first. They were adroit enough, however, to put forward as their representative a man who in his own talent and personality reflected only honor upon them. This man was Chauncey M. Depew, the gifted manager and orator who led the Harrison hosts at Minneapolis and who on countless occasions before and many since has exhibited the strong Vanderbilt preferences for the ex-President.

The country has unwittingly the curious spectacle of two successive Presidents of these United States in turn being patronized by and then patronizing the two leading and great money families of New York. This is a real substance that seems to be to be striving. We do not comment, upon it, however, we merely invite attention to it.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

The case of Carter H. Harrison, murdered by an assassin, is a startling reminder that "the evil that men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones." It is shocking to contemplate the manner of a public official in such a fashion, and it is if possible even more shocking to behold his memory decorated by a body of men who belonged, and probably were, for the purpose at certainly at least, among the chief mourners. But there comes in this case an afterthought which is sent to bring philosophy to the relief of admiration very sad indeed. When one comes to reflect that both the assassination and the mournful rot which took place a few days following, over the dead mayor's vacant place, were both consequent results of the game of deep, dark politics, seriously played, there comes at once a flood of new ideas which have nothing in common with the feelings that ought to come of such unusual and inhuman business. Carter H. Harrison's ambition for power had become so deep-rooted and his yearning for leadership was so intense that he could wink at the sacrifice of any principle of public good that obstructed his advancement. He lived, almost better than any other man, the difficult dual role of tolerating gross evils under the pretense of upbuilding them, and at the same time winning plaudits from the respectable classes by making them thus be dominated and overawed the lawless. While his popularity among the better element was spoken of in the superlative, there is no doubt that he had taken for himself a set of principles among the thieves and gamblers of the city. He rose to the only really he was too much the friend of lawlessness over the civilizing forces, and it is said without that his ambitious success became his ruling passion, but for the blind of disorder and reflect that they are the set down.

In the allusion to the sacrifice in Chicago it is well to remember the fact that we have something like the same order very near at home which needs prompt and vigorous suppression. To trifle with enthroned lawlessness, to shout and talk about with gamblers and thieves and bawds, to order some with roughers and illegal traffic—this has been a too familiar spectacle hereabouts, and holds no good omen of municipal health and safety.

AMONG EXPERTISES, as other foreigners were at the Indian Exposition, have surreptitiously made their way into Sioux America, the W. at Indian, Australia, Japan and Jerusalem. It was easy to decide them, it is now a pleasure to rate them.

WHILE it takes more silver now to buy a diamond mine than it did a while ago, still every silver dollar coined at the U. S. mint is worth one hundred cents in any part of our broad land. The white metal is not utterly depreciated.

THE CHANGES of today are sometimes the terrors of tomorrow. People who expect to live on a tomorrow should not, therefore, be too hard in judging Governor Pennoyer of Oregon today.

IT WILL take edical treatment to preserve those flaxlocks unknown till they will be wanted in 1894.

Hotel Cullom.

This conspicuously commercial House has finally gotten possession of the magnificent pavilion on annex floor, and recently occupied by the Union Club, and they are now fitted up in luxurious and home-like shape and are being used by the complimented frequenters of this elegant, unique and high-class family Hotel, as which a limited number of fine rooms and board can now be had for the winter. Citizens of Salt Lake City who desire the quietude of a home combined with the very best of service and careful attention to every want and a superior table can now obtain these luxuries at a very reduced rate.

The Cullom does not run on the European plan, rates $2.00 and $2.50 per day. George Cullom, Assistant.
