

London High Society Women Take Up Latest Eating Fad

HARLEY street physicians have given it out that to recuperate weary, overstrung nerves there is nothing in the world so admirable as to partake of food in a reclining position. This immediately promoting digestion and thus sending nutriment into the vital parts, says the London correspondence of the Omaha live. The suggestion has been enthusiastically adopted, but it has been left to the smart women to formulate rules whereby such meals can be made smart, chic and sociable.

It is because of these functions that at the moment, artful couches of any date, but preferable of the Louis period are in such demand and fetch such prices. But lounges take up space even in a large room and it is only her intimates who are invited by the hostess to partake of "reclining" meals. So far the mere man has been rigidly excluded from these festivities, though his time goes on he may, as in the days of old Eveance, find himself admitted to grace these occasions when no doubt a picturesque attire of knee breeches, court shoes and doublet with lace cravat and ruff will be essential.

At one of these "reclining" parties the other day a well-known duchess had the three windows of her boudoir in her Park Lane house wide open. In the grate blazed an immense wood fire and in vases were huge bunches of wallflowers which had been grown under glass the odor of these flowers being said by scientists to have an especially soothing effect upon the nerves. Alcohol in any shape is strictly forbidden at these feasts, but a cigarette is usually conceded on condition that the tobacco is beyond reproach. All the dishes served are prescribed by the food or digestion specialist and "mixologists" can tell you every ingredient contained in each. A great physician will summon the chef of the culinary department in his patient's household and tell him precisely how every item is to be treated so as to digest every element before it is sent to the table. He will instruct the chef to compute the seconds or minutes at which salt, sugar or some herb is to be inserted in the confection with the same precision as he counts the patient's heart beats.

Coffee is the most fashionable beverage at these parties. It is now the custom to grind it in the presence of guests so as to assure them of its freshness. Coffee mills are among the most fashionable presents, especially for brides, so much so that it is no unusual thing for a prospective matron to find herself in possession of half a dozen of these small machines. At the end of a meal a white robed chef enters, bringing on a tray all the appliances necessary for making coffee either in French, Turkish or Russian fashion.

These parties are responsible for an entirely new garment somewhat more elaborate than a tea gown, with which the wearer dons her best jewels. It is usually of some diaphanous material, but must be of exquisite texture and quality and guaranteed not to wrinkle.

GRINGO SONGS IN '49.

In the gringo days, the days of old, the days of gold, the days of '49, amusements and recreation in California could only be found in the mining towns when a strutting singer made an appearance in some saloon, the admission fee paid by frequent visitors to the bar. The songs were set to well known ballad tunes, and if the singer

"caught on" he or she was rewarded by a coin tossed through the air. In days, they were "sung with great aplomb" to which was added the lady's warning call, "Come, come, gentlemen, don't let the barkeeper go to sleep."—Out West.
