IN ALL THE COURTS.

Justice J. B. Blazer's Name Comes Up Very Prominently,

ON A MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL.

A Youth Charged with Burglary—Probate—Naturalizations—The Davis Execution.

The principal matter going forward in Chief Justice Merritt's division of the Third district court today is the legal argument on motion for a new trial in the case of Timothy Sullivan vs the Anchor Mining company. Suit was originally brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of $25,000 damages for injuries sustained by him while working as a miner in a tunnel in the defendant's mine, in Summit county, in December, 1891. It was alleged that owing to the unsafe and insecure condition of the roof of the tunnel a portion of the same gave way, and the debris falling upon plaintiff, broke his left arm above the elbow, crushed and broke his left leg below the knee, and occasioned other bodily injuries which confined him to his bed for a period of six months and since incapacitating him for active duty.

Upon the trial, which took place before Judge Miner (he having come down specially from Ogden for the purpose) in December, 1893, the jury found a verdict for the defendants. Subsequently some serious allegations were made against J. B. Blazer, one of the jurors who sat upon the hearing of the case. These were filed in the form of affidavits, and given in the News at that time. They were presented in court this morning together with Blazer's answer thereto.

The affiants were Sullivan the plaintiff, Attorneys Tom Ferguson, D. N. Straup, Gerald Jackson, and Charles H. Hinman, one of the twelve jurors. Sullivan declared that Blazer was a warm personal friend of David Keith, who was financially and otherwise interested in the case, being a member of the defendant corporation, and that he (Sullivan) did not have a fair and impartial trial.

Ferguson, in his affidavit, said Blazer came to him and informed him that if he had any cases in the Third district while the then existing panel of jurors was in service, he (Blazer) for a small consideration could "fix" the jury and get any kind of a verdict desired.

Jackson deposed that he was present when the above statement was made by Blazer.

Juror Hinman, one of the three jurors in the minority, deposed as to the verdict in the case having been found hastily and without due deliberation.

In his answer Blazer now states that he had heard read the affidavits of Sullivan, Ferguson, Straup and others. He never in his life, he says, asked John Harris to go to Attorney Brown, to defendant, or any other person, and ask to have him (Blazer) retained upon the jury. It was not true that he said he wanted to do Keith some good if he could, nor did he request Harris to tell Mr. Brown that he "should make a pretended examination as to his qualifications or competency." In short, the whole purpose, intent and aim of Sullivan's affidavit was false. When he (Blazer) entered the jury-box he was not a prejudiced or biased juror, and he had not the slightest feeling against the cause of plaintiff. The affidavit of Tom Ferguson was absolutely false, and, adds Blazer, "the character of Ferguson ought to be enough to be an answer to it without my oath." He never said anything to him about "fixing a jury," and branded Tom's affidavit as "a falsehood from one end to the other."

The motion for a new trial is based upon the following grounds: (1) Misconduct of the jury, (2) accident and surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against, (3) newly-discovered evidence material for the plaintiff which could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered and produced at the trial, (4) insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict and that it is against the law, (5) errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by plaintiff.

C. S. Varian and Judge Powers are attorneys for the plaintiff, Sullivan; Brown & Henderson represent the Anchor Mining company.

The arguments are expected to occupy a long time, and it is hardly likely that the case will be submitted until late tomorrow.

Broken Limb.

One of them struck her knee in a depression in the ground, and her sister falling on her, the child that was underneath had her limb broken above the knee, which was also injured.

Took It as a Joke.

[Detroit Tribune.]

An inhabitant of Viro, in Finland, named Seliquist, who for a long time past has been living on bad terms with his wife, had lately a narrow escape from being poisoned by her. She called at a chemist's and asked for some rat poison. As these creatures are very rarely seen in that neighborhood the chemist had his suspicions aroused and gave the woman a perfectly harmless drug.

On second thought he decided to mention the matter to her husband and requested him to say nothing about it to his wife. In the evening, as she was preparing the porridge, the man kept a watchful eye on her movements and noticed that she scattered something out of a paper into a saucepan.

When the porridge was ready he sat down to the table and began to eat. After a while he got up in great agony, paced up and down the room and at last fell fainting on the floor. This was what the woman expected. She now pulled down a rope through a hole in the ceiling with a noose, which she placed around her husband's neck, whereupon she ran up stairs into the garret in order to pull up the rope and hang her husband in that fashion.

Meanwhile the husband got up and tied a few chairs to the rope. The wife did not return to the room, as she dreaded the sight, but went out into the village to raise an alarm, saying that her husband had hanged himself in her absence. When she came back with a host of neighbors and crocodile's tears in her eyes there was her husband sitting at the table, laughing till his sides ached. The chairs were still dangling on the rope.

A THRILLING RESCUE.

A Wrecked Boat's Crew Make Fire Signals of Their Clothing.

CHICAGO, Sept. 13.—The fire boat Yosemite, wrecked on Hyde Park reef last night, sank today. The crew of ten men, to attract the attention of the life-saving station, made torches of their clothing, saturated with kerosene and attached to long poles. These improvised signals were waved by the men; the kerosene trickled down poles, badly burning their hands and arms, but even the excruciating pain did not make them cease their efforts.

The boat was facing a heavy gale when it struck the reef and at once began filling with water, which put out the fires. For five hours the crew bailed, while the Jackson Park life-saving crew, under command of Captain St. Peters, attempted to reach the gradually sinking craft. A heavy sea was running. Three times the lifeboat capsized, throwing the crew into the lake, but each time the boat was righted and within a few moments' time, the Yosemite plunged to the bottom. Two water-drenched life-savers took off the ten fatigued men of the fire boat.
