COHN BROS.---ALWAYS THE CHEAPEST.

SCHWATKA IN ALASKA

FIRST LETTER FROM THE EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

Observations In and Around Juneau—Up the Yukon River With Native Guides—Greeted With Hospitality—Crushing Through Ice Cakes.

[Rts. S—International Press Association.]

TAKHIN RIVER, May 20, 1891.—On May 7, 1891, the Pacific Coast Steamship company's vessel, "City of Topeka," crossed Dixon Entrance and entered Alaskan waters, leaving behind some of British Columbia.

All of these waters, for a stretch of over a thousand miles along the Pacific coast are not deep inlets and channels, huge salt waterrivers, so to speak, that, cutting in every direction, make a vast network of inlands, picturesque in the extreme and not even yet wholly explored. The most freely navigable of these many channels running parallel with the coast, is called "the inland passage to Alaska," and is yearly becoming more popular with summer tourists seeking rest and recreation here. One of the peculiar features of this northwestern section of Alaska, and one that can only be appreciated by the explorer or hardy frontiersman, is the ease and pleasure with which one can travel the coast waters, safe as things go in the rugged "Northwest A," so soon as these are left, and the Alpine interior reached.

On board the "Topeka" was the New York Ledger Alaskan expedition that had the prospect ahead of it, the subscribers being in command. One of our main objects was to move as quickly as explored country permitted, in any direction, yet a general plan had been formed to follow our old explorations of 1883 to, or near, the Pelly and Yukon river confluence, and there begin the work into the unknown, interior westward and southwestward.

We arrived in Juneau on the morning of May 7, and found the town in a state of excitement, the Topeka being the first vessel to arrive since the opening of navigation, and bringing the news of the opening of a new and hazardous route from Juneau with citizens of that district, to the Yukon.

"The biggest city in the biggest territory in the largest republic in the world," as they used to patriotically put it. It was to go over what was called the Takhin trail, that led to a large lake in the interior, and by its draining river gain the Yukon, where I joined my old trail of 1883, and would then carry out the program as previously and it was altered as available memorial 4 might be given. Anyway, this was a basis, could be made to supply the Yukon valley even to Behring sea, better than by any known route, while it would in the hands of a leader in the cause of the New York Ledger expedition, to be able to do this preliminary pioneering. This belief was founded on interviews obtained from the leading Indians when bringing out their furs, and from prospectors who had searched this general line for prudence interests. It might be, that the trail through Yukon trifle would not pay, while the future might, and it was well to be prepared with the information. The many other reasons for or against this trail can be made clearer as we travel over it later. When we arrived in Juneau a corresponding interest was soon worked up by those on the ground, the citizens pledging everything they could to make the enterprise a success, and so we disembarked here.

The first point we touched in Alaska was Tongass. After Tongass, we meet nothing but salmon canneries for a few days, reaching Juneau on the 6th of May, where our freight is disembarked and we continue on, for this metropolis is of enough importance to be touched by the returning steamer, thus making a short round trip.

We make up next day in Glacier Bay, on the first vessel of the season to every it, as it is only visited in the interest of the summer tourists.

At Sitka we were crowded with passengers of the same class as those at Juneau. There were ten prisoners, only six of them being murderous, quietly cooked to half-breeds and Indians. The natives of Sitka, in conversation disclosed a statistical fact there had never been a murderous trending, not a legal execution, in Alaska. At Wrangell, in early days, a murderous gambler examined before a vigilance committee, the chief was pulled out from under him and he broke this peaceful record; also his neck; but say one familiar with frontier justice knows there is a wide chasm existing between the and hanging. In a somewhat similar action, an Indian murderer performed twelve or a rope, to the satisfaction of the vigilance factions and the greater distribution of the lesser factions. Silkiness is very agreeable to the eye, somewhat absolutable to the nose, due to a factory Herring factory and attendant guano factory. The United States Marshal attempted to arrest a native here for trying to drown a white guy of mixed race. I have never yet seen anything less tickling about an Alaskan Indian woman, but I suppose Justice says. The Alaskan Civil and Criminal Code, including of the proceedings, is be secured here well in the Alaskan woods, where the powerful needle in a haystack would be as conspicuous as a seven pounder by comparison. There were six novel prospectors from Killisnoo to Juneau.

Juneau reached, accordingly, we began at once, the first difficulty being the report that the Takhin river was not yet open. A big canoe, a Chinaman or two, an axe, was easy enough to get but prefers themselves were the load trail were hard to obtain until a sort of rebellion of the Takhins. Yesterday by accident, a local policeman, stimulated by the citizens, took a hand and records were slowly obtained. Yesterday we left Juneau, the trail enough, at good stiff rates of interest, and had to double packs (averaging 70 pounds each) over the trail of nearly 50 miles as it proves.

The 20th of May we got away, arrive Takhins and there while men, six of the natives being packers and one, Robert, the owner of the trail, was the guide, resolution of some citizens who believed in the horror of the average Indian for all legal papers I had a large number, signed by the Indians, and many colored seals and vitiated, and this they signed by touch of pen, while the United States District court interpreter read aloud the contents, and solemnly equal to that gives a sailor warrant. I will retain that page of legal hieroglyphics and while something to sing were about it, yet it would be can only compare it with the verdict of the frontier coroner's jury wherein, sitting on a man's body dragged from a river and with a knife still with the handle, they concluded that the deceased had come to his death from drowning, caused by water pouring in through the bullet hole.

So about noon of the 21th, with the American flag hanging from the peak, we got away in the beginning of a wind and stinging sleet, and we had not gone our first day's trip one of as most unpleasant of the whole journey. An extraordinary number of citizens (Takhins) had come out of Juneau, and the shore near the cleared trail, and as we pushed away down the cleared gave us most a hearty cheer and many waves which for some reason, yet.

Let us now take a hearty look at the little expedition as it started. The Indians being sufficiently described in past times over this route, we can take up in detail. The commanding officer was the scientist one of the party and made excellent bullets in the rear part of the canoe.

The scientist of the expedition was Dr. C. Willard Hayes, representing also the U. S. Geological survey, through the courtesy of Chief Powell, the chief, the head of that government bureau. Dr. Hayes also fill the photographic work in the main, as well as the logo graphic work, and sketching. I had hoped to get a professional photographer, and felt sure of success when Mr. Lauderbach, one from Philadelphia, made an application for the place. He was excited as the grand jury, having already been sworn in, but we both thought it best not to take the trail, and Dist. Ad. Attorney thought otherwise. Both were willing enough, but there was nothing in the law (the Oregon one's provisions were, by act of Congress "as far as it is practicable") that would allow it. The only excuse whatever was one of so very slim, I have attempted and only by a physician.

"Not impose a grand juror duty? I sound the judge."

"I will only excuse him from duty on that ground," he replied, slowly, shaking his head. So Mr. Lauderbach, one of and for Hayes did duty during the proceedings, to be secured him well in the Alaskan woods, where the powerful needle in a haystack would be as conspicuous as a seven pounder by comparison. There were six novel prospectors from Killisnoo to Juneau.

A TIGHT FIT.

the inlet growing larger as we ascended it towards the glacier, and the wind well be signified with the name of boreas certainly as in comparison with those from the Gulf of Mexico that days then visited. The Takhin glacier or in the Hoonah Tribe, one seen either in or out of the Alaskan Alpine region. It was really a drop dead, and in being placed Dough-face in crystal.

It was quite early when we got to the mouth of the Takhin river, at a little peninsular salmon factory, the white men sleeping in it, and the Indians in the smoke-house, all of as still as potatoes.

Bailey Tolerance.

The body is more tolerant of injury than most people think. Every year or facilities with the fact that a bullet killed drop in the flesh dry and in all cases none serious trouble. Nature presents tentacles to surround the ball with a sort of sac, in which condition it is said to be tolerated. In this one the comparative smallness of the caliber forces in any event, but the same thing may occur with no such favoring conditions.

A man had been badly lacerated in the leg by broken glass. The wounds healed under treatment, but a somewhat uncomfortable feeling remained and in walking the man was unable to bring his foot squarely to the ground.

About three years later an increase in this uncomfortable feeling together with a stiffness and pain in the knee joint, led him to enter a hospital, where a surgeon between in the neighborhood of the other revealed a fragment of window glass, one inch wide and two inches long.

A sharp corner projected into the cavity of the thick part. There could be no question, he found imbedded deeper in the tissues. In this case the fragment was surrounded by a mass of tough tissue, which acted like the protective sac around the imbedded ball.

So electrical was this hardened tissue in protecting the adjacent parts that there was neither pain nor stiffness, nor inflammation. The man left the hospital well on the sixth day, and the leg subsequently proved to be as sound as the other.—Youth's Companion.

A Natural Spectre.

In Surrey county, N. C., there is a mountain whose outline displays a startling likeness to the Sphinx of Egypt. It is in the northwestern part of the state, just east of the Blue Ridge range, and lies prone upon the Piedmont plateau. At a distance of ten miles the figure is the exact counterpart of that of a giant recline, with the face looking up to the precipitous rocks, and with head raised and as if in the act of rising. The head and neck are of solid rock, several hundred feet in height, the shoulders and breast which support them being finely rounded off by nature and scarcely half buried in the soil of the surrounding meadows. When looking at the figure, although removed twenty-five miles distant from it, the thought bounds one that it must be a thing of life and intelligence.—St. Louis Republic.
