SKIRMISH WITH DESPERADOES.

One Officer Killed and Two of the Gang Captured.

CLARKSVILLE, Tex., March 25.—A desperado named Cohenstone and his gang were attacked near here yesterday by a sheriff's posse. In the skirmish that followed Officer Whitmore was killed, and Cohenstone wounded. Two of the gang were captured, but Cohenstone escaped.

Financially Embarrassed.

PHILADELPHIA, March 25.—The firm of A. Whitney & Sons, car wheel manufacturers, are financially embarrassed. The firm is now composed of John B. and James S. Whitney, surviving sons of the founder. Rumors of the embarrassment of the firm are confirmed by James S. Whitney, who declined to give any details of the matter beyond admitting the statement. The car wheel works were founded by Asa Whitney in 1845. When the works were built they were among the finest in the country. As business trade was built up, The founder died in 1874, leaving an estate valued at $1,000,000, and the management of the concern in his three sons, George, John B. and James S. After the death of the father it was found that he had left a large sum to his daughter, who had married Bishop Howe of Reading. The dower was secured in the manufactory a couple of years ago, it was found that the interest of their inheritance had not been regularly paid and appeal was made to the courts. An order was made assuming the unpaid interest, and the plant is said to have been mortgaged to secure its payment. George Whitney died in 1885, leaving an estate valued at $200,000. John B. Whitney died and also retired from the firm, but at the time of placing the mortgage he was constrained to come back into it and is now the senior member. Since then the works have been doing a fair business but they have been gradually falling behind. The younger establishments last year taking the firm by commercial agencies cut down to between $200,000 and $300,000, but their credit was good at that amount.

THE LITTLE COLORADO.

Storm and Rain Cause the River to Rise.

HOLBROOK, Ariz., March 25.—The heavy storm and rain of the last few days have caused the Little Colorado to rise. The railroad company had been working all last night to prevent washouts. The citizens are protecting the town by putting in brush and trees along the river bank. The bank is washing away rapidly, and strenuous efforts are being made to save property.

Railway Accident.

RACINE, Wis., March 25.—The north bound Chicago & Northwestern passenger and a freight train collided at Racine Junction early this morning causing the loss of one life, fatally injuring one or more persons and seriously injuring half a dozen others. The pecuniary loss is estimated at $50,000.

The Honduras Lumber Company.

CHICAGO, March 25.—The Honduras Lumber Company, composed of American capitalists, has organized here with a paid up capital of $250,000.

The company possesses stumpage on two million acres of land in Honduras, on which is hardwood timber valued at over $7,000,000. Mills and furniture factories will be erected and the product shipped to the Latin-American States or direct to Central America, and also to the United States and Europe.

Invitation Accepted.

LONDON, March 25.—The British government has formally notified Blaine, United States Secretary of State, that Great Britain accepts President Harrison's invitation to take part in the World's Fair at Chicago in 1892. A royal commission will be appointed to assist the British merchants exhibiting the products of the British industries at the fair and to further the British interests there.

Germany at the World's Fair.

BERLIN, March 25.—A conference in which a number of prominent German manufacturers took part and at which the Chicago World's Fair and the prospects of Germany there were discussed took place today. The manufacturers concurred in the belief that a representation worthy of the German empire could only be obtained if the government commissioner to the United States were clothed with powers to insure to the manufacturers of Germany who might contemplate exhibiting, all the advantages which German industry is entitled to.

On this day, March 25, 1865, was fought the battle of Fort Steadman, one of the most stubbornly contested ones, of the late civil war. Early in the morning, Lee, the Confederate, made a daring attack on the Union forces, and captured Fort Steadman on the Appomattox River. He was, however, compelled to retreat, leaving 2,000 men captured, and a large number dead and wounded. The Union forces lost 68 killed and 527 wounded. Lee fought desperately. His plan of joining Johnston was frustrated. Grant's strategy involved the complete isolation of Lee, and it succeeded. This battle sealed the doom of the rebels.

HERMAN LEMON, foreman of a freight in Seattle, Washington, was killed by the mouth of the hose, while powerful jetsons were throwing streams of water at 300 pounds pressure. The force smashed the nozzle from his hands and the stream knocked him down. Before he could be reached he was swept by the force of the stream along the wharf over a six-inch spike, which caught him tearing open the stomach and lower part of the body. His sufferings were terrible. He died in great agony.

Doings at Deseret.

We have been honored here by a visit of four of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, viz: Elders Lyman, Smith, Cannon and Lund. A ward conference was held by previous notice from the Stake Presidency who were present, except Brother Daniel Thompson, first counselor to President Hinckley, who is very sick.

Brother Joseph S. Black, who has been our Bishop from the first organization of the ward, desired to resign that office, and by unanimous vote was honorably released therefrom. Elder Lyman and all associated with him, in view of the rapid growth of numbers and the large tract of country over which they were scattered, thought the time opportune for dividing the ward into three separate wards, which was done. The Central Ward is Deseret, and Milton Moody was chosen Bishop, with A. F. Warnock and Isaac Wilson as counselors. Oasis on the east. The people being the central point will have for Bishop Brother John Styler, with Lars Hansen and Jacob Hawley for counselors. The new district on the north side of the river, which is fast filling up with good people, will be called the Hinckley Ward, and will be presided over by Brother William H. Pratt, with George A. Black and Thomas Davis for counselors. Full quorums of teachers were also unanimously ordained for each ward.

In the Hinckley district is a large tract of land owned by gentlemen of Salt Lake City, who have spent large sums of money in clearing the land and planting about 100 acres last year, from which they have realized very little returns, owing to the loss of water during the irrigating season, from the dam being washed out. The same company also spent several thousand dollars putting in the river a very substantial dam, under the superintendence of Mr. Charles Hazen. This enterprise was looked upon by some at first with a degree of suspicion, as a measure to resist rights. But the strength and permanency of the new dam has given a degree of confidence which make its projector appear as benefactors in Millard County.

We have a vast area of splendid land in this valley, but for fifteen years the people have been heavily taxed to keep a rickety, shifty dam in the treacherous river, and were often left without water when they most needed it for irrigation. Now the farmers have bright for water, and a unity of well directed missile and brains will yet furnish happy homes for thousands of industrious people. We thank the boys of the Oasis Band for their pleasant serenade of the Apostles during their visit.

On Friday last some of the family of Mr. Thomas Cropper drove about 250 sheep to the river for water. The sheep got into the quicksand for water and could not get out. Mr. C. and his neighbors worked the Tanner to extricate the sheep, but as firmly were the sheep's feet fastened in the sand that it took the strength of a man to pull them out, one at a time. Twenty-one of the sheep were dead when taken up.

La grippe is getting in its work amongst us. Bishop Black being one of its victims. W. W. Black is unable to be out at the conference, and Bishop Styler has been sick for some time and had to be taken home unable to remain at the meetings.

A. BLACK.

DESERET, March 23rd, 1891.

Amusements.

"All the Comforts of Home" will be presented by Charles Frohman's company at the Salt Lake Theatre in the evenings of Thursday and Friday, and at a special matinee on Friday. The play is certainly a comedy, but it frequently crosses the line which divides comedy from farce. Funny incidents follow in such rapid succession that the audience is kept in a continuous round of laughter all through it.

Alfred Hastings places on his uncle's house the sign "Apartments to let with all the comforts of a home." He secures a miscellaneous assortment of lodgers. Among them are a retired produce dealer with a domineer and a wife and an impulsive daughter, with whom Hastings falls in love. Then there are also an English duke, a starved actress, an opera singer and a Scotchman. With these characters all domiciled under one roof, the comforts of home which prevailed can be easily conceived of.

On Saturday evening, and at the Saturday matinee, Chiesman's Consolidated Minstrels will give entertainments at the Salt Lake Theatre. Among the talent in this troupe are Billy Emerson, Hughey Dougherty, Barney Fagan, Luke Schoolcraft, Griffin and Marks, Fiske and Hanson, and a recent importation named Signor Benedetto.

At "Wonderland," the eight-foot lady Miss Ewing, Keller & Austin, and the three sisters are the attractions this week.

LINCOLN'S STEPMOTHER.

SALLY BUSH'S LOVING CARE OF THE MOTHERLESS BOY.

A few miles from the Ohio River, of Southern Indiana, in the midst of its grand old forest of towering oaks, of walnut and maple trees, were scattered lots of prairie land that rose and fell in waves of hill and hollow most fair to see, says a writer in the Chicago Inter-ocean.

Upon one of these eminences stood a small straightly cabin of rough, unhewn logs, with neither door nor windows. In one corner of the room poles were stuck into the cracks of the logs, while the other ends were supported by forked sticks sunk into the earthen floor. Over these poles were laid, upon which dry leaves were scattered, the whole surrounded with skins of animals and old clothes. This was the only resistant cabin, but one or four three-legged stools, a slab with the flat side upward serving as a table, and a Dutch oven and a skillet completed the furniture of the room.

This was the home of Thomas Lincoln, an easy going idle man, whose chief excellence lay in his skill as a huntsman and his remarkable aptitude for story telling.

About a year after the death of his wife, who had left to him two children, he sought another in the person of Sally Bush, who had in earlier years rejected his suit, but who was now a widow, living with her three children in Kentucky.

In homely words he urged immediate marriage, and she yielded. It is fair to presume, however, that had she known the untruth about the palatial cabin she her consent would have been hard to gain.

Packing up her household goods and loading them on a wagon drawn by four horses, the newly wedded pair arrived at Thomas Lincoln's home, imagine her disappointment when, at the close of a cold December day, they drove up before the doorless, windowless cabin, in front of which stood the two children, Nancy, a girl of 11, and Abe, a boy 9 years old.

Ill-clad, with unwashed faces and unkombed hair, these little creatures gazed with eyes and mouths wide open at the wonderful treasures unloaded from that wagon.

There were chairs and a table, and knives and forks and cooking utensils, and most marvelous of all, a real bureau, that in those days had cost $40. Title had Thomas Lincoln had declared a stolen article, and had urged daily to sell it, but she would not heed, and so it was brought to the backwoods cabin.

To these untutored children, who had never heard of such things, and who knew nothing of their use, this change of surroundings came like a perfect revelation, and changed the whole color of their lives.

In person, Sally Bush was tall and stately, handsome in face and figure, with earnest eyes and beautiful auburn hair. In conversation she was bright and cheery, and to all her charms added a sweet force of character, expressing itself in neatness, energy, economy and thrift.

Desirable as was her future prospect, impressing to her every feature, she let no trace in lamentation. Looking calmly into the face of chaos, out of which she would create comfort and order. Turning with joy to the two neglected Lincoln children, she cleaned them thoroughly and combed and straightened their tangled locks. She taught them how to wash themselves, and gave them suitable lessons in the virtues of cleanliness. From her own wardrobe she fashioned for them garments, and clothed them comfortably from head to foot. Nice warm beds and morning food were provided for them. She treated them so kindly as she did her own children, and took them into the heart of her large and gracious motherhood. Through her influence, her husband laid a wooden floor, and in due time doors and windows found their proper places. Little by little more land was cultivated and better provisions were made for the use the family.

Indeed of blows and hard usage, to which the children had been always subjected, she ruled them by love and by winsome ways. As Abraham Lincoln so often said in after years: "She was the woman who first made me feel like a human being." To him she was the embodiment of all things good—his "angelic mother," his "angel of a mother," as he used to call her.

Unsatisfied she certainly was, as measured by lofty attainments, or by the accomplishments of those minority minds, but she was strong in high purpose, and capable of imparting stability to others by her earnest zeal. A short time after she arrived in the cabin, John Johnston, "Abe," to whom she was to come warmly attached, was filled out in a comfortable suit of clothes, and sent to school for the first time in his life.

"It is true, he walked four and a half miles each day for his instruction, it is true, he had to carry his dinner, but it was enough to stir desire for more, and ran to bring flame the light that was in time to lead his feet through darkness and gloom.

Utterly ignorant, rude and uncouth, the new mother found this boy seemingly destined to a life of recklessness and disorder, and from these depths she rescued the pure and honest and successful spirit that is today loved and revered by the world.

Through the transformation she brought about in the home and in the entire life of the family, she completely won the boy's confidence, that he noted entire upon her wisdom, and yielded her, in all things, the most implicit obedience. "I do assure that she was the best friend I ever had," he wrote of her. "I can say she never gave me a hard word or look, and never refused to do anything I requested him.

"He mind not mine, what little I had, seemed to run together. I had a son John who was raised with Abe.

"Both were good boys, but I may say, both now being dead, that Abe was the best boy I ever saw. I do not mean Abe to run perfection (but did not want him elected), was strict sensitive, and when he some down to see me, after he was elected president, I still felt that sensibility was hurtful to him, and that I should see him no more."

James Gaffney of 2239 Choteau Avenue, St. Louis, put $1000 in greenbacks in the parlor stove for safe keeping. Mrs. Gaffney, all unconscious of the treasure which she was about to give to the flames, started a fire and was amazed to see through the grate the greenbacks curling up in the flames and sailing up the chimney. Mr. Gaffney thinks this an expensive method of heating the house and will be more careful in future.
