INDUSTRIAL CHRISTIAN HOME

the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this act."

There was no restriction in regard to creation of corporations.

But I have no intention of discussing the momentous interests involved, or of dealing with the questions of law which have to be passed upon. I simply desire to call attention to a fact—one that ought to give pause to thoughtful men. If it seems dangerous to appropriate money "for the benefit of those who desire to sever their relations with the Mormon Church," is it not far more dangerous to begin suits to dissolve church corporations, seize church property, and to forfeit and escheat it to the United States?

There is no dispute as to certain facts involved in the controversy as to the real estate in Salt Lake City, which, as the property of the Church, has been adjudged to belong to no one, and therefore, in effect, to be ready to be escheated to the United States. The ground whereon stand the Tithing office and the Church offices was at the very founding of Salt Lake City by the Mormon settlers, set apart and dedicated to their Church, just as was the ground known as the Temple Block. It was not then a part of the domain of the United States, but of Mexico, the actual settlement having been made before the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo. The treaty made it part of the domain of the United States, but it was not possible until long after to obtain strictly legal titles under the land laws. The ground, however, was always deemed and held to be the property of the Church, and was used by it for strictly religious and Church purposes.

Mr. Caine reviewed the history of the suit against the Church, with which our readers are familiar, and read the decree of the Territorial Supreme Court forfeiting the Church property. He then said:

It is worthy of note that while the court directs the Temple block to be surrendered to the representatives of the voluntary association known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, it denies the petition of these same representatives to have the rest of the real estate the titles to which were in all respects practically similar to that to the Temple Block. The title to this other real estate, is declared not to be in the late corporation and does not belong to its successor, to whom the Temple Block is adjudged, and all personal property is adjudged—

"Escheated to and the property of the United States of America, subject to the costs and expenses of this proceeding, and of the receivership by this court instituted and ordered."

Upon what broad legal ground was this judgment as to escheatment of the Church's personal property based? Because, in the language of the decree—

"There did not exist any trusts or purposes within the objects and purposes for which said personal property was originally acquired as hereinbefore set out, whether said acquisition was by purchase or donation to or for which said personality or any part thereof could be used, or to which it could be dedicated that were or are not in whole or in part opposed to public policy, good morals, and contrary to the laws of the United States."

The forfeiture and escheatment of the real estate is not adjudged because separate suits are pending for that purpose, but in effect the final degree declares it to be subject to forfiture and escheatment because—

"The legal titles and estates in said real estate, and every part and parcel thereof, were acquired by said late corporation and its trustees subsequent to July 1, 1862, and that prior to said date neither the said corporation nor its trustees had any legal title or estate in and to said real estate or any part thereof."

I do not make any comments on these extraordinary proceedings and the still more extraordinary decree of the supreme court of Utah. An appeal has been granted to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that august tribunal will finally pass upon the law involved therein. I simply want to call attention to the undisputed facts and to suggest that there are involved in the issue joined pecuniary interests and legal rights of the most transcendent importance outside of and beyond those of the Mormon Church and people.

If it is possible for the Congress of the United States to legislate a religious corporation, which it is admitted had a legal existence and vested rights, out of existence upon the assumption that it is opposed to public policy and good morals, then the existence of any religious corporation and the security of its vested rights, its real and personal property, depends upon, in the United States, political power, the votes it can influence and control.

[illegible] are not alone endangered. If the Congress of the United States can direct the dissolution of one kind of a corporation, it can do likewise to another. It only requires that its objects and its purposes shall be deemed by the majority to be opposed to public policy and good morals and laws enacted after its incorporation, and down it goes.

Let me tell you that fundamental rights can not be taken from Mormon citizens and the Mormon Church without endangering the liberties and rights of others. The Constitution can not be violated with impunity, even temporarily, because a people hated, and despised, unjustly maligned and misrepresented, are the only sufferers. Experience teaches that the only sure guaranty which any one religious denomination has for equal rights is absolute security for all. If for one pretext or another the property rights of one sect can be invaded, inevitably a like fate will sooner or later overtake the adherents of some other creed.

Is there no danger threatening religious organizations except sectarian jealousies and rancor? Is there not some reason to fear assaults upon church property from a rapidly growing class that is at war with all conservative institutions? If the time ever comes when an assault is made upon the rights of property in this country, at what class will it first be aimed? Remember, history repeats itself. A Roman Catholic priest having persuaded Louis XIV to revoke the edict of Nantes, whereby more than a million Protestants were driven from France, doubtless hunged the delusion that for all time his church was secure. For a century Roman Catholicism lorded it over France, and then reaped the whirlwind. Talleyrand, degenerate son of the church, suggested to the Constituent Assembly the policy of the state hiring the priests and regulating religion as it did any other domestic affair. Irreligion was in the ascendant. Church property was confiscated, one hundred and thirty-four archbishops, bishops, and coadjutors, and forty-six thousand priests who refused to become functionaries of the state were placed outside the pale of the law. Persecution followed. The nonjuring clergy were declared "suspected of revolt against the law and evil intentions against the country." In due time, adoration of the Goddess of Reason supplanted the worship of Almighty God, and following came the revolt of the peasantry, the insurrections of Misnes, Franche-comte, La Vendee, and Brittany, emigration, transportations, imprisonment, the guillotine, or drowning, for two-thirds on the clergy of France.

Let the precedent be made that the state, for any pretext whatever, can interfere with the property rights of religious corporations, and the whole church structure will be struck down by the iron hand of conscienceless uniformity. To-day it is the Mormon Church, upon the theory that the state, being the conservator of public morals, can deprive it of the control and management of its property, because it teaches and upholds a doctrine inimical to society. To-morrow it will be the Roman Catholic Church, because its ecclesiastical polity recognizes an executive head extraneous to the state, and compels obedience to its decrees by exerting an influence over superstitious minds which degrades the object thereof, and thus injure society. There will be no lack of pretexts, and the logic of common sense will avail nothing against the swelling tide of popular prejudice or the radicalism of irreligionists.

The arguments which support the assumption by the state of such extraordinary power are not new. Mirabeau forged them from the suggestions of Talleyrand for the Constituent Assembly of France, and the advocates of sequestration of Roman Catholic Church property in Germany and its confiscation in Italy and Mexico have not improved thereon.

Your aim—said Mirabeau—was to destroy ecclesiastical orders, because their destruction was essential to the safety of the state. If the clergy preserve their property, the clerical order is not destroyed; you necessarily leave it the right of assembling; you sanction its independence. If they are proprietors they are independent, and if they are independent they will associate this independence with the exercise of their functions.

The Mormons have experienced persecutions and endured trials in the past. They have contended with mobs, and had to do with State authorities, unable or unwilling to withstand mob leadership. They have, as a people, been twice driven from their homes and despoiled of almost all their earthly possessions. They were compelled to make an unparalleled march across trackless plains and over unknown mountains to find a place of refuge in a desert region. They reclaimed the desert and have made it the marvel of this age. Their Church is now being despoiled. Its property is in process of being, or is declared, escheated to the United States, and under the guise of a great charity it is deliberately proposed to vote a large sum of money, to relieve whom? Only women "who desire to sever their allegiance to the Mormon Church."

Let me say that, having survived all efforts to destroy it in the past, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will doubtless survive, even if its property is taken from it and missionary establishments set up and maintained in Utah at the expense of the Federal Treasury.
