PROVO.

PROVO, UTAH, - APRIL 5, 1894.

Hallett-Smith Murder Case.

The first witness for the prosecution in the case of Hallett and Smith, charged with the murder of Royal Grant, was George D. Grant, father of Royal. He testified to the purchase of a house about two miles south of the Grant ranch at Woodworth by Frank Grant, from the Bar and Cattle Co. [Note—This house was also claimed by Hallett.] On Saturday, February 24th, Frank, Royal and the witness went down to the house, witness having a gun and each of the boys an ax. The day was spent in cutting logs. The next day, Sunday, the three again started for the house. As they approached the house, and as they got on a rise, witness saw Hallett and his boy on the run. Witness remarked, "Look at Hallett and his boy run." Hallett pulled his gun on witness and said "Stop!" Witness stopped the team, and just then a man came around from the corner of the house and fired. Boy exclaimed, "He has hit me." Witness said, "Are you hurt?" and jumped out. The boy said, "I am killed." Witness took his son's head on his knee, and Frank begged the wounded man to speak, but no word was uttered. Witness said to Hallett, "You have shot my son and you will suffer for it." Hallett replied, "You are a ——— liar, I never fired a shot and you know it," and then laughed. The body was placed in the wagon and Frank and Witness drove home, Hallett keeping his gun on them as they drove away. The old gentleman was greatly affected while giving his testimony, and shed tears when referring to the death of his son.

Frank Grant corroborated the testimony of his father.

Pat Shea, Mr. Darrow and others testified concerning threats made by Hallett against the Grants on account of land disputes.

Mrs. Grant testified that her sons did not have a gun with them on the day of the homicide.

The prosecution rested.

Mr. D. Rosenbaum opening statement for the defense. The defense expected to prove that Hallett and his son went out to an old cabin (the scene of the shooting ground) to get some lumber to build a pig pen with. The boy took with him a thirty-called rifle with a view of shooting a deer or rabbits. Mr. Grant and his sons drove up. Royal Grant jumped out of the wagon, ran in front of the mules and leveled a rifle on Hallett. Hallett demurred to this proceeding and ordered the Grants to leave in peace. This the Grants refused to do, and Royal Grant continued to threaten that he would kill Hallett. At this juncture J. W. Smith appeared on the scene and took the rifle from the boy, and fired at Royal Grant, who fell. Smith then turned his rifle on Frank, who had a revolver pointed at Smith; but Frank threw up his hands and entreated that he had enough. The story of Royal Grant was placed in the wagon and they drove away.

A couple of depositions of Chicago parties were submitted, corroborating threats made by the Grants against Hallett and Smith.

Mrs. Hallett, one of the defendants, testified to hearing Royal Grant threaten to kill her husband and Mr. Smith. The defense sought to prove by this witness that Hallett was the lawful owner of the property in dispute, but this was objected to by the prosecution and the court ruled against the admittance.

EPHRAIM.

EPHRAIM, SANPETE CO. - APRIL 1

A JUST CRITICISM.

The Crimes Against Trout and Humanity Committed at Fish Lake.

Reports have reached this far of the annual wholesale slaughter of various silver and unmatchable trout of Fish Lake, that most beautiful of Utah's natural pleasure resorts. It is a shame that such a place is not equipped, and a wonder that the stock of fish has not been exhausted long ago. To those who have never visited the place, its access is now easy, the opportunities are ample, and low rates—dollars of dollars' worth are wasted every year—are almost incredible. It is a sad, sad reflection, that during the last dozen years, hundreds of tons have been caught during the spawning season, and thousands of pounds have allowed to be taken to Ephraim on the ground, at, it is alleged, the Indians have destroyed the most, for it seems to (and perhaps is yet) a practice with some to trap all they could, whether they had use for them or not, and pile them in heaps along the street, awaiting buyers. The writer remembers coming to the lake at 10 o'clock, seven years ago, and there he found more than he could take home, and seeing as many as five or six loads piled up along the Jorgensen's Gulch (weeks to say nothing of the waste around Twin creek, the chief fishing ground this time of the year). The impossibility of seeing to fish Lake has discouraged the few who have been P. Expedition have not been used to any extent, for whenever they would be effective, simpler means can be as well, or the popular ways of fishing have been to trap in willow tubes, or club with the first handy piece of wood.

It may be that the game law is more strictly enforced across the lake now, but if anyone knows that it is not, they should be prompt in reporting to the proper authority, and if the local commissioner is slack in the discharge of his duties, can not someone else look after the matter?

A Mining Revival in Prospect.

As the season approaches, prospectors for minerals push farther up the mountains. A number of claims have been filed, and each element has a "story to tell." It is interesting to note, however, that some of the rock is proclaimed rich by assaying men and we may hear of something soon that will make times interesting for miners in these parts.

A Canal Purchase Mooted.

The question of purchasing the Horsethief canal is being seriously considered by water users of Cottonwood creek. There is some talk, also, of the city buying it, but it hasn't been brought up as official business in the council yet.

A few months since I tried a quiet suggestion the trial of Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I am using the remedy, I have been using the same with the largest results. The effect is excellent, being the day I commenced taking, we have been slowly but surely improving and another testimonial that I am claiming I shall write to embody to my so attested health."
