Business Office

DEATH KNELL OF HARD TIMES.

Twenty-two thousand new freight cars have been ordered since New Year's; which would surely not indicate any very lively expectation of general railroad disaster in the immediate future.

Within the last six weeks the wages of a quarter of a million workmen—two hundred and fifty thousand perhaps sounds a little better—have been increased, in almost every important instance without previous solicitation by the laboring men. Moreover, there has been a very large increase in the number of men employed. All of which would seem to prophesy the advent of prosperity and the resurrection of industrial life.

The general volume of business in the country, as shown by the clearing-house returns, has increased from 20 to 30 per cent over the returns of a year ago; and the year thus far has also been noted for a strong and steady advance in the price of nearly all farm products.

So far as signs go, therefore, no risk will be incurred in stating that for the merchant, the shipper, the manufacturer, the wage-earner and the farmer, the bed-rock of depression and hard times has been touched and the upward movement toward the fair surface of normal business health has set in all along the line and is good earnest. Every department may not feel the stimulus just yet, for building up is always a slower process than that of demolition. But that there is certainly force and stability in the improvement noted cannot be disputed, and for one result of it everybody ought to be thankful—the calamity-howler will be soon out of a job.

OPEN AIR FOR HEALTH.

Notwithstanding all the benefits that mankind are supposed to derive from improved sanitation, from better houses and food, from advanced methods in medicine, and from the thousand and one other things that would naturally be expected to conduce to prolonged life and increased health, the fact remains that without plenty of exercise and abundance of pure open air, the death-rate remains almost if not quite as high as at any time since medical reports were kept. This, at least, is the conclusion of many experts in life insurance—a branch of business in which it is to be expected that the closest examination will be made of mortality statistics. Certainly in the study of the life-searching of American Presidents the pessimists find support for their theory. One such expert, whose figures and conclusions are discussed in the last issue of the Sanitary Republican, points to the interesting fact that the most Presidents do not compare well with the earlier ones in meeting the "expectation of life" as derived from the insurance tables. The individual record is as follows:

	Age at inauguration.	Expectation of life.	Years lived.
Washington	57	10	67
Adams, John	61	7	90
Jefferson	57	10	83
Madison	58	9	85
Monroe	58	9	73
Adams, John Q.	57	10	80
Jackson	61	7	78
Van Buren	54	11	79
Harrison	68	2	31
Tyler	51	14	71
Polk	49	16	53
Taylor	64	3	65
Fillmore	50	15	74
Pierce	48	17	64
Buchanan	65	3	77
Lincoln	52	13	56
Johnson	56	10	66
Grant	46	18	63
Hayes	54	13	70
Garfield	49	16	49
Arthur	51	14	57
Total years	1,157	301	1,356
Average	56	11	65

This table unfortunately starts off with a course that is contradictory of the result sought to be established, for Washington did not live up to his "expectation of life" at the time of his inauguration. But after him and until Harrison, who stood at the half century mark of the government, every President survived up to and in most cases materially exceeded the aforesaid "expectation of life." From Harrison down, however, it will be noticed that no incumbent of the office, with the exceptions of Tyler and Fillmore, has exceeded even "expectation" and only one (Buchanan) lived up to the limit. Examining the table in another way, it will be seen that in the first half century the Presidents had an expectation, at the time of inauguration, of living 122 years, while in the aggregate they actually lived 167 years; during the last half century this ratio over expectation was less and 61 years in addition. The result is certainly striking and is thus explained by the insurance authority:

> This is not to be explained by accidents or chance. The cause lies deeper. It is due to one of the last six Presidents were assassinated, but the number of years lost by these violent deaths represents only half the aggregate loss. The fact under plain to see that the people depend office so becoming the money a burden for any man to shoulder without almost certain shortening of his life. The responsibility is enormous, the anxiety is laborious, and I never upon anyone to take Presidents serve for the full period of the natural expectation. The average length of the lives of the early Presidents and the latter ones is more nearly alike we remember that radical women, systematic hygiene and means of travel, constant exposure to the weather have all and wonderful development since the days of Washington, Jefferson, the Adamses, Madison, Monroe and Jackson. We cannot now explain the cause. The fact remains that the early Presidents lived long than, while latter Presidents invariably die sooner than they.

The conclusion would appear to be that the strain and worry and habits of modern life in their exactions upon men in official and professional life are less than offset by the advancement in hygiene, etc., referred to. In the case of the long-lived Presidents it will be admitted, we believe, that they were forced to lead an outdoor life much more than their later successors have done, and after leaving office they generally came into close and continuous contact with Mother Earth and her best medicines, fresh air.

RUSSIA AND JAPAN.

The account given by a Norwegian captain (an eye-and-ear witness) of the situation there explains the display of Russian squadrons in the Asiatic coast and the massing of troops on the Manchurian frontier during the recent war between China and Japan. These movements were at the time a subject of much surmise, being considered far more elaborate than necessary for the actual defense of Russian interests. It now seems clear that the Russian government, under cover of the disturbance in China, gathered large forces at a convenient spot in order to be able to pursue its policy of acquiring an open seaport on the Pacific, and it is expected that an advance will be made in the near future towards the Yellow sea. In order to hold a port there, Russia would probably find it necessary to secure the control of Manchuria and of Corea, and on that account the feeling in Japan toward Russia is very bitter, the people seeing in the movement of the latter country an attempt to rob Japan of the sweet fruits of her victory.

A European diplomat of high standing is authority for the statement that a secret alliance is believed to exist between England and Japan, and if this should prove correct, it would create but little surprise should the mikado take up arms against the czar. The Japs are at present imbued with a conviction of their own invincibility, particularly after their battle with the Chinese giant, and with England's moral support (and perhaps definite promises of a substantial nature) they would gladly break up for a march toward St. Petersburg, as their minister-elect at Washington the other day said some of them expected to do. Russia, on the other hand, is not isolated. The existence of an entente between that country and France, although officially denied, is not seriously doubted. Then there are signs indicating an understanding between Russia and China, and altogether the situation is such that serious complications in Asia are within the near possibilities. Russia's aggressive steps have been curbed more when by the condition of the imperial treasury than by the threatening attitude of her adversaries, but the conditions is now removed to some extent, by the offer of a syndicate to lend the government $50,000,000 money, which would go far toward the expense incident to the kindling of the war dogs, if the time is considered ripe for such a display. The situation among the nations of the earth at the close of the century is one of the unimaginable features.

WALL WORK WILL DO.

Alexander Williams and Sam have sold to the News office various samples of fruit grown in their orchards, which eight years ago was nothing but a dry piece of regulation land, and considered totally worthless. It has two miles out of the Original town, in Salt Lake county, and was purchased by the present owners in 1887. The specimens of fruit consisted of the "Bartlett Bigarreau" and "Black Tartarian" cherries—as good as can be produced anywhere—of splendid size and being "Unfruitful" strawberries, of medium proportions, though not yet fully ripe, and "Pop" carrots, of extraordinary size, and bunches of mild and white carrots. The trees and vines on which these grew were all raised in the county, and in city adjacent from one of the nurseries near Salt Lake City. We are told that Messrs. Williams & Sons have in the same district an abundance of other fruit trees—pears, plums, peaches, apples, peaches, raspberries, strawberries, grapes, etc., and we are easily able to believe that they have a ready market for all they can raise, which amounts to a little considerable in the course of the season. Every tree was planted by themselves, and last year nearly a ton of grapes was disposed of by them at good prices.

Now, what the News wants to say in this connection is that there are hundreds of opportunities for men out of employment to get pieces of land much more inviting than were the two Cove gentlemen settled on. My industry many heads of families now idle or dependent upon others for subsistence, can make for themselves good homes, and by giving attention to the business of raising fruit they can secure a comfortable living for their families. All that is needed is properly directed labor and a little of the spirit of enterprise without which success is to be attained anywhere. It is an old story, and the reason why because weakness through frequent repetition. Nevertheless, it is the practical Gospel and abounds in present wealth and future wealth.

ENGLISH FEATHERED SONGSTERS.

The New Dominion's protest to be an authority on English birds, but it has undertaken to saying it has had its fill of the English sparrow, but we the Australians have had their fill of the English rabbit. This being the case, notwithstanding the various benefits the little imported songsters provided to secure for us, we are not ashamed to voice the suggestion of a friend (friend, that the recent liberation of English birds is greatly to be regretted with fear and trembling. Perhaps the remedy proposed by our Dominion Antipodean, that the gentleman threatening to let the latter loose be enjoined by law from doing so, is too severe. For all we know, the English lark may be a very moral, lively bird—certainly we have heard and read much of her sweet singing, her mounting upward toward the sun, and so forth. But what we are specially anxious to know is as to her breeding, her propensity and her appetite for bugs. It will be remembered that her kin-brother the sparrow was hailed as the most voracious exterminator of insects—our deliverer from crawling such forever, whereas experience has shown that worst the only thing on earth he will not touch is a worm. If we cannot welcome to the lark it must be upon conditions, and only to hail while she is on her good behavior, for we cannot repress the thought that the mischievous boy who in the very beginning of the sparrow in Oregon threatened an assassination with a rusty flipper shot was unofficially instructed by the state importers of the house pest, was really an agent and instrument of Providence in disguise.

The newspapers in congratulating Emperor William on his having gone through the ceremonies at Kiel without a break were, to a familiar phrase, too previous. The glory and splendor, by which the spectators were for a moment dazzled, having passed away, it is seen that no mistake whatever was made to the aged statesman at Friedrichsruhe. Future historians who will recognize in Prince Bismarck the originator of the Kaiser Wilhelm canal as well as the builder of the German empire and the architect of the throne which alone lifts its present occupant above the common level, are likely to mention the omission as one of the worst breaks in his imperial majesty's career.

Patrick, who gained fame as president of Brazil during the revolution in 1891, is dead. The year after the return of Admiral De Mello as it Da Gama from the naval review in New York, the Brazilian navy revolted and joined the insurgents in Rio Grande do Sul. After some sharp contests in Rio Janeiro harbor, the rebels were defeated. A few days ago, it will be remembered, news was brought of the suicide of De Gama, who preferred death to torture or captivity. Now Peixoto has been summoned to the other shore, and the rivals have both been removed from their scene of earthly strife.
