OUR NEW COLONIES AND SUGAR.

[Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.]

The United States and her colonies, the Philippines and Cuba, produced, three years ago, 2,000,000 tons of sugar; the consumption of the United States in spite of Cuba's deficit. The rest of the world produces 4,000,000 tons, and sells a great deal more than the United States. What the people need is save their industry from destruction is a specific duty on all imported sugar with an additional discriminating duty from countries paying an export bounty upon their beauty. To satisfy the sugar consumers all over the United States, with their vast contingency of boarding-houses, railroad systems, commission men and banks whose capital depends on it, were largely in business, have to prepared to make a strong fight in Congress for the protection of the industry.

It is an interesting fact that sugar-cane in the Philippines came from Cochinta and Java. With unfavorable industrial conditions and methods of cultivation and manufacture little advanced from the primitive, save in a few plantations, sugar has been been produced at a cost of 2 cents a pound, which has discouraged by every possible restriction, tax and tariff, the export of industry from the short Cuban and Porto Rico crop. Nevertheless, in 1897 the United States imported from those islands 14,241,149 of sugar, and from Hawaii 1,000,000 pounds of 18 pounds each. Spain's trade in the same month amounted to $20,000,000.

What will happen to the planters of the United States if the Philippines are of 100,000 is largely directed into American markets, and the temporary benefit to the domestic beet and cane industry from the short Cuban and German crops is more than satisfied?
