CONSTANT STREAM OF VISITORS.

The Display That Surprises Most People and Pleases All Who Visit It.

This is the fourth day of the Industrial Fair, and its interest instead of increasing shortly, A constant stream of visitors was passing through yesterday, and the exclamations of surprise at the good quality and the variety of the exhibits, and the taste displayed in arranging them, were frequent. Lots of the people never imagined before that so many branches of industry were represented here. Everywhere who goes to the place is pleased with the visit.

The Fair is proving a great attraction to tourists, who either a quarter to finger at the various exhibits and examine them, though doing so will cost them time to view other sights in the city. But there is a lesson of industrial life in the various displays that cannot be learned in riding round the streets and viewing the exterior of various buildings.

H. L. A. Culmer, of the Bureau of Manufactures committee, yesterday offered today an idea that has pulled some of the merchants and is likely to do considerable more work in that line. He made a special selection of one of the home industries and mentioned what merchants patronized the production in preference to the imported article. Then he put up a letter very giving the merits of the home industry particulars. There were just hundreds various houses named. There are a number of other city goods merchants mentioned in same who which they had asked to be put on the roll of honor, but they didn't they will have a good deal of trouble only when the record which is being made abroad. The idea is a good one and should touch in every industry represented. The friends of home production should be known.

It is but work to do all the records in one day, however of space forbids, therefore, the committee moved is sufficient to permit mention many days to come. The Deseret News will take the liberty of giving a few.

Entering at the East South street door in the exhibition the first display made is that of the Deseret Woolen Mills, in which stands of various grades, blankets, flannels, worsteds, cassimeres, etc., including selection of wool as the goods are made from have on hand. Thirty days ago they had 400,000 worth, but owing to the home industry agitation this amount has been nearly depleted. The result of the movement is that the mills will start up again, probably within ten days, and will give employment to from 300 to 400 hands. This is one of the efforts of the resting of the manufacturer committee, by their truth in this line they are benefiting a branch.

The display of the Salt Lake Lithographing concern is quite telegraphic. One website shows the seven volumes through which a lithograph goes before being finished, to impression being given from each stone in the case of a picture of Salt Lake. A long list of business cards, certificates, scrolls, etc., is also shown.

In the same room is the show made by Henry Dinwoody in home made furniture. One of the articles is a finely dovetailed table that cannot be excelled in the line by any importation. The table is of the ordinary house size, but there is a big leaf beneath. The maker said to Mr. Dinwoody's store four years, and seeing an opportunity he made up the store and he could suppose the place of furniture at some other place. Mr. Dinwoody had been made "Tell him a good home for it, you will," said Mr. Dinwoody, and the bargain was closed. The man did it, and now Mr. Dinwoody sends Zion no more to the ladies, or for the other stores that are produced on the same terms.

Mr. Dinwoody deserves credit here for a work that is not taken by home manufacture, for it would be to their credit if they did. There is an exhibitor at the Fair who has been engaged in the manufacture of a metallic case of ornamental furniture for some time. To a member of the committee he said he had not been enabled to dispose of a single article of what was really superior workmanship. Mr. Dinwoody was spoken to, and immediately gave an order of exceptional magnitude. He thinks he made an announcement that will find a response with every Mormon of home industry. Here he, "I will (those words by my purchase of goods, and the cost of transportation thereto, and if any home maker can give me an article of similar quality and taste as the one here, I will give him my patronage." That is a lesson to dealers. If they will contribute to the home manufacturer that he patronizes article made, delivered home—not with the item of freight attached—of the home industry can do more.

The Utah Matches company, of which Mr. Dinwoody is president, has in with an exhibit Utah made mattresses. The whole display is attractive and instructive.

BUREAU OF MANUFACTURES.

Will Prepare an Address.—Pottery Institute Co.—Territorial Building.—The Ladies.

The Bureau of Manufactures met this morning. There were present: Messrs. Grant, Culmer, Jennings, Morris, Cutler and Secretary Wandell. The executive committee reported good progress in the work since the last meeting. Much miscellaneous business was transacted.

An address was ordered calling the attention of the people to the fact of manufacturers of home goods to call office at the earliest moment of their intention and date thereof.

The tenders of the letters were submitted to the many society ladies at the meet the ladies will work of the Fair which is expected to be a great success.

The secretary was instructed to formulate the idea to a Foreign Department company letter, the circulars and send it to the east south for the bureau.

J. C. Cutler was appointed to arrange a meeting of prominent men from the outstanding manufacturers to discuss the same matter under charge of Jennings Committee. The names Regester, Morris, John Morgan and Henry Smith to act with Mr. Cutler as a committee to arrange for meeting proposed.

The various boards with pleasure that the letters of the city were carefully attending the same and proposed to form a permanent organization to take the work. It was moved to extend thanks to the committee passed to the chairmen of the committee, and the bureau adjourned.

Home Made Candies.

Home made candies, in an attractive entablement at most times, and some times, in an ongoing growth of new bottles, fill the boxes of R. C. R. Its latest grocery which, it is the top of counters from the back of the Social Gem. Home production was the call on the place is kept in every well regulated window display home days.

A New Story of Elder Fox.

In line and long for April (Philadelphia) appears a letter from Mr. Jeremiah Fitzer, formerly of a North Carolina regiment, in which he relates the following of President Lincoln, who was in the habit of visiting the hospitals of the great president's great kindness of heart:

Some hard cases came in Virginia, in which several men were killed and wounded. I was taken prisoner with a lot of others of our battalion. We were placed under guard in the house of a well-to-do citizen, and I was placed in a room adjoining the room in my prisoner my disease much. Next morning the guard came and told me that I was wanted at General Grant's headquarters. I was night no time to do our study room, and that I would not go. Guess was the answer was my name. I was sure the answer was "Yes." So I was so sick. I was the only one of our boys who was wanted at the headquarters, and he asked me if I would go. I said I would rather die than go. He said I would be shot if I did not go. I was frightened almost to death. My body pained, my knees shook, and the sweat was dripping from my face, although the day was cold. However, I mustered and the pain was about, and I was alone with the commander-in-chief of the United States forces. He said that I was so frightened I could hardly speak, and strong from his early work, he which made me feel that I was a man to be water. He was so kind and good that I took for an home. Afterwards (musing for a while, he said he had a brother in the Confederate and where my home was. He then stood up my mind from a book, and said me, if it was alive. I replied that it was. He said that he if I was a Mormon, and I was convinced him of that. He then went to the table where Wynde was sitting, gave him some money, and told him to go home to make and the clothes. The guard was called, and with a heavy oath say, "I know you are a Mormon." He was a Mormon, President Grant was a mighty fine gentleman, whom I always remembered in my prayers.
