ACCIDENT TO AN EXCURSION TRAIN.

The One Which Went to Tintic Yesterday Meets With a Mishap—Passenger Hurt.

The Rio Grande excursion party which left for Tintic yesterday morning on a special train of five cars had a rather lively experience at Eureka. Just before pulling into the depot at that place at 11:15 the smoking car rolled over on its side, leaving the rails on account of a defective switch. The train was drawn by two engines. These passed over in safety, but the smoking car, which was the foremost car of the train, proved a greater strain than the rails could bear and it went over as indicated.

One passenger, William Fairbanks, of Payson, was standing on the rear platform when the mishap occurred. Unfortunately for him he was caught beneath one of the car wheels in such a manner as to badly crush his right leg. The car was lifted as quickly as possible and Fairbanks extricated from his painful position and removed to the Eureka hotel, where he received surgical assistance at the hands of Dr. Deybernah. Later he was brought to Salt Lake and taken to St. Mark's hospital, where he is receiving every needed attention. It is the belief of the hospital corps that his leg will be saved.

The other passengers on the excursion train escaped uninjured, and aside from a shaking-up and a bad case of fright returned home all right.

WANT EXTERMINATION JOB.

Rival Detective Agencies Bidding to Wipe Out the Robbers' Roost Gang.

Anxious to Undertake the Task Independent of the State—Simply Ask for a Monetary Consideration.

Denver Post: The Robbers' Roost is threatened in what are called the Henry mountains, south, and a little west of the Green river in Utah. It is not very far from Vernal, the nearest telegraph station. Brown's Hole, where Roy was killed by Johnson, is in the foothills of these mountains. The entrance to the Roost is a narrow passage blasted in the solid rock high up on the side of an almost precipitous cliff. For a few feet the passage is straight and only wide enough for a horse to go through, then there is a larger space like a landing enough for the horse to turn, and then the passage makes a right-angled turn, going to a narrow lane as before out to an open space on the mountain.

The passage is lined with small holes drilled in the rock, in which dynamite is placed, with wires running from each of these holes up to the headquarters of Chief Cassidy. Three electric batteries are placed and a touch of the button would blow up a thousand men. A sentry stands guard night and day at this entrance, and his electric signal warns his chief of the approach of his enemies.

After the first passage through the rock is passed there is clear traveling for a few rods, when another similar passage is encountered, also lined with dynamite like the first. Then another open space and another cut in the rock and still another, so that four of these forts have to be gone through to get at the outlaws, who have thus skillfully combined science with brute force and reckless daring. Only one horse can go through at a time, and two men armed with rifles stream in the passages. There is absolutely no other way, except by balloon, of reaching these men.

When these four passages are gone through, a level space is reached, with numerous caves abounding in the rock, also blasted out. This is headquarters, and here the outlaws congregate and form plans for future crimes. Chief Cassidy's cave is luxuriously fitted up and the men all have the comforts of civilization. At the chief's stove are the buttons which explode the mines in the passages and also bells ring when the sentry gives the alarm. The protection is ample and complete. Down one side of the sheer cliff the outlaws have rigged a windlass for hauling supplies and even cattle.

The horses are trained to go unsteadily and carefully through the tortuous passages, but cattle could not do it. In this lair, more fabulous than any described in yellow-backed literature, is almost untold wealth gathered by the gang and stored there in the dry caves. No man not a member of the gang has been curious enough to penetrate it, but this description was obtained after months of patient work by the Thiel agency and is practically accurate. To enter means death.

"TO ENTER MEANS DEATH."

Denver Post's Hair-Raising Story of Lurking Danger at the Entrance of "Robbers' Roost."

Thiel's Detective agency and the Rocky Mountain Detective association are rivals for the dangerous job of driving out of the country the gang of cattle thieves, horse thieves, bank robbers, desperadoes and murderers whose headquarters are in Brown's park at Powder Springs, says the Denver Post. Part of the gang became notorious years ago as the Hole-in-the-Wall set of Wyoming. Both of the detective forces are anxious to have the honor of exterminating the aggregation.

John E. Payne, Denver manager of Thiel's agency, says that he has had the gang and the country thoroughly examined by Captain Seavey, and has arranged a plan by which he can drive the gang away and capture or kill most of its members. It proposed to the cattle growers' convention that he be allowed to do so, payment guaranteed.

J. W. Cook, Denver manager of the Rocky Mountain Detective association, offers for $500 a month and expenses, during six months, to exterminate the thieves or pay for every horse and steer stolen in the next six months. He says he has eighty experienced men scattered about the Rocky Mountain region from whom he can select a posse of twenty, each one of whom has killed from one to five men, has been shot at himself from ten to one hundred and fifty times, and has had plenty of experience with all kinds of law breakers. He says that in 1896-8 the association was employed by the Colorado Cattle Growers' association to break up cattle thieves' gangs; that the first year he has caught and convicted twenty-two thieves and drove twenty out of the country; that the second year they caught and convicted thirteen thieves, and in both years recovered over 500 head of cattle. In 1890 one of his men destroyed the Meeker gang, capturing six thieves and murderers and recovering 250 head of cattle in three months.

Neither company desires aid from state troops or any military organization, or any department of the government.

CAPACITY OF THE TABERNACLE.

It is Figured Out for the Number it Will Accommodate at Entertainments.

The seating capacity of the ground floor of the Tabernacle occupied by spectators at any entertainment is 2,590, estimated at 29 inches per seat.

The entire gallery seats for spectators at 30 inches per seat is 1,320.

The choir seats, including prestiding officers and upper gallery and ward bishops; home missionaries and reporters divisions will seat 1,250 more.

This makes a total of the entire building of 5,161, in the case of entertainments.

Those measurements were made Saturday, under the direction of Prosiding Bishop Hardy.

With the seating space measured at 18 inches per seat, which is about the average of such, women and children when the building is crowded as at conference times, the figures would reach 5,500, and there have been occasions when about 6,000 persons people have crowded into the building, with all available standing room taken. But such crowding as this is not possible in the case of entertainments, and the figures presented by Mr. Hardy present about what would be counted on upon such occasions.
