Descending from great things to small—from the high places of the nation to the State Legislature—these latter seem to be getting past all redemption. In days long gone by—in the time of such small fry as Webster, Clay et al to be a member of the Legislature was esteemed in itself quite an honor. It added dignity to the old and was a brilliant feather in the cap of youth. Fancy now the ridiculousness of a young man's aspiring to become a State Representative simply for the honor of the thing, or contemplate the still greater absurdity of his being sent there simply because he was honest and had the requisite capacity to fill the place. If he has been fortunate—if he has understood well the pecuniary value of his vote at some critical moment—he will indeed be congratulated by his friends when his labors are over; but after all the handshaking is finished the grand question will be asked him—the interrogatory upon which the whole ovation turns will be put—"How much did you make?" And if he has been at his post while the Legislature have been manufacturing a United States Senator, the reply must be both salisfactory to himself and to his friends, or people will think him a fool in good earnest.

United States Senator, the reply must be both satisfactory to himself and to his friends, or people will think him a fool in good earnest. Shall we say the people are to blame for these things? Posibly not the people so much as that pitiful, pretentious and fraudulent sham called "society." In France when "society." Is discussing a new character, the first question put is, "What is he?" In England it is "Who is he?" and in the United States, and we may say, especially in California, it is, "What is he worth?" What wonder, then, if the rising generation, not being angels nor saints, nor given to self-sacrifics, nor delighting in being ostracised from this model "society," should show an increasing tendency to worship at the ahrine of the Golden Calif What wonder if the embryo states man should consider it a "smart" and a "nest" thing to do, with one hand to assist his oratory with appropriate resticulation and keep the other open behind his back to receive the golden fee—the price of his eloquence and his vota.
