BUYING AN EASY CHAIR.

A SCENE IN REAL LIFE.

"I'm coming in to-day to buy that easy chair you have had about so long," said Mrs. Bland to her husband, as the latter was about leaving the house one morning. "And I want you to go with me. I want you to be satisfied you know."

"Oh, bother!" replied Bland in his off-hand way. "Suit yourself, if you want to. I don't want to go with you. I don't want to pick it out. I want you to be satisfied. It is to be bought for you, you know, and besides, you have got to pay for it, and why shouldn't you have the most to say about it?"

"Nonsense!" said Bland. "Buy what you think best, and I shall be satisfied. Good-by, dear," giving her the usual parting kiss.

"Good-by, John. But I shall call at your office, and don't you dare turn me out." This with a merry shake of the head and a warning gesture with her dainty forefinger.

Mrs. Bland is true to her word, and in the early afternoon makes her appearance at her husband's office. Of course he again tells her she doesn't care what she gets, anything that pleases her cannot fail to please him; but Mrs. Bland refuses to yield the point, and finally Bland puts his hat and coat, and the Blands are soon on their way to the furniture store.

The shopkeeper greets them with excessive politeness, notwithstanding there is nothing in his line a shopkeeper so much dreads as a man and wife on a shopping expedition. He knows that there are two minds to be made up and two minds to convince instead of one, and he knows that whereas he might reason one of those minds separately into buying anything in his establishment, to induce them both together to purchase so much as a second-hand washboard is utterly beyond hope or belief.

"An easy chair? Oh, yes! This way, please, for a gentleman?" Then, after glancing at Bland, the shopman says, looking at Mrs. B. "Something nice and comfortable, I suppose?"

Mrs. Bland ducks her head in acquiescence and the pair are shown up stairs into a great barn of a loft, with chairs enough in it, apparently, to seat the whole world.

Bland looks about him in despair, feeling no doubt very much like the donkey who starved to death in the midst of a field full of haycocks, through sheer inability to make up his mind upon which one to begin his dinner.

Mrs. B. however, with unerring instinct, makes straight for the most expensive piece of furniture in the room, saying: "Try that, John. Pretty, isn't it?"

Bland looks askance at the rich stuff with which the chair is upholstered, and sits down as cautiously as though he were depositing himself in a basket of eggs. His body hardly touches the seat ere he is up and out of the splendid affair.

"Is it easy, John?" asks Mrs. B., as she steps forward to give it a trial.

Without noticing his faint "Yes," Mrs. Bland sinks into the chair as into the arms of an old friend. "Isn't it lovely!" she exclaims, laying her head back and closing her eyes, out her tiny little feet in comfortable abandon.

"How much is it?" she asks.

day. And when you're going to get something that will suit you, especially when it's something that's going to last as long as you live. But then, I don't care. I leave it all up to you. What do you think?"

John doesn't think; or if he does, he doesn't speak his thought. He sees that the seventy-five dollar chair is the favored piece of furniture, and says it doesn't make any difference to him. Let her suit herself.

Finally the seventy-five dollar chair is purchased, each protesting to the last, however, that it makes no difference to him or her.

There is at least one thing to congratulate the Blands about. Neither will ever dare to become tired of that chair. If one of them should ever speak a word of disappointment, the other would quickly respond: "Well, you would have it, you know, though I thought we could have got as good for ever so much less."—Boston Transcript.

SPICKS OF SPICE.

Charity covers a multitude of sins. Selfishness is the single source of sin. Life is the childhood of immortality. Nothing is politically right which is morally wrong. The young are slaves to novelty: the old to custom.

Heaven is never deaf but when man's heart is dumb. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man. It is the sausage manufacturer who makes both ends meet. It is our own vanity that makes the vanity of others intolerable to us.

Another hotel horror, as the man said when the hash was set before him. There are few things in the world more rasping than a file of unpaid bills. Said an English peer amid the pyramids, "I see here that mummy's the worst of the work."

With regard to our bad qualities, there can only be perpetual warfare or disgraceful peace. The course of true love often runs smooth until it is wrecked by the wife's misplaced switch. Nothing can atone for want of modesty, without which beauty is ungraceful and wit detestable.

The question is, can a girl who doesn't use powder make her hair bang?—Burlington Free Press. Certain thoughts are prayers. There are moments when, whatever be the attitude of the body, the soul is on its knees.

To educate a man is to form an individual who leaves nothing behind him; to educate a woman is to form a future generation. Women never will be paid for lecturing as men, simply because they have done so much of it for nothing. —Hartford Sunday Journal.

A bill posted in Lumpkin Co., Ga., offers for sale a one-eyed mule with three white feet and to the best of my recollection two of them on one side.

"Guilty or not guilty?" asked a Dutch justice of a prisoner. "Not guilty." "Den what do you want here? Go about your pizness."—Boston Star.

"What do you think of Fielding?" she asked of young Mr. Tawman. "Oh, it's important, of course, but won't avail anything without good batting."

"She says 'I want to be an angel,' and he swore that she was one all right." "Then he married her. De-muried sustained."

The weak woman who is frightened half to death at the sound of a pistol, is not in the least degree alarmed by her own bang. —Oil City Gazette.

Texas claims the oldest old maid. She is Miss Hall, of Galveston, aged 101, so she says, though many think she is trying to make herself out younger than she really is.
