ESSENTIALS FOR VICTORY.

Englishman Says the American Navy Possesses Them All.

Find it Having Men Who Can Shoot, that Gives the Quickest Time and the Fast Battleships.

London, Aug. 1.—Correspondence of the Associated Press.—The Daily Telegraph contains a long article from one of its special corresponding officers, under date of July 4, in which he writes special notes, considering from the battle just ending with which the United States ships and some Spanish ships fought the battle of Santiago of the Spanish fleet, and the lessons which naval officers have can draw from the result of the battle.

The correspondent says: The Spanish ships made a very poor showing, and exhibited no fighting capacity. Their materials, that they exhibited during the battle, was in keeping with the fight, for the women and children, that I am convinced, they did not understand the battle, therefore, the Admiral Cervera would not have left Santiago of course, at an immediate unknown end.

The battle also proves that it is best to give a fast cruiser to fight under cover of a fast cruiser, to fire under cover and to keep the enemy's ships at a distance, so that they will be able to fire at the enemy's ships, and not be injured by the enemy's fire. On the Spanish side they fired too high, and the American ships were only damaged and not sunk. The Spanish ship was sunk, and the American ships were not sunk. The Spanish ship was sunk, and the American ships were not sunk. The Spanish ship was sunk, and the American ships were