A PECULIAR TARGET.

An Amusing, and Yet Thrilling, Shooting Incident in India.

Four Europeans who had been out after their in the Maimensing district, were returning at the close of a long day, and had almost reached the face of the river where they were to dine and pass the evening when they encountered a herd of elephants. The "line" at once pulled up, and the elephants, loaded with tusks, took into a hon e (it was the old muzzle-loading day), more especially where there were children, and those that we fire on a bit.

"All right," said another, "but we have not had a shot at any of them; what do you say to a 'pool'?"

"There's nothing to fire at," observed a third.

"There's that gharrah," said the captain, pointing to an elephant vessel in which some rhyte who was working at a little distance had as usual brought their day's supply of drinking water in.

"Good," said the fourth, "but, what with bad light and that distance, it's no means an easy shot. I propose we each put a chick on."

"How shall we decide as to the order of firing?" said one.

"O," replied the captain, generously, "I'll commence at your end of the line."

The mark was by no means an easy one to hit, for the distance was high a hundred yards, the gun smooth bore, and the light of that deceptive kind which one just beneath a bright light and dark. But, on the other hand, the hunters were exceptionally good men, all excellent shots, and those whom could hit a running deer from the back of an elephant twice out of three times.

"Fire away," said the captain.

No. 1 grazed the right side of the vessel, and it was thought that he had hit it. No. 2 was just over it. No. 3 went a trifle higher.

"Thank you gentlemen," said the captain. "I'll trouble you for these twelve rupees."

He raised his gun as he spoke, and the next moment the jar was covered with a heavy rain of lead. The vessel was seen to wiggle, and then to kick, while a feeble cry proclaimed it to be a baby. Consciousness was depicted on every face. The elephants boiled, the Sahibs jumped down and rushed to the spot, the patient running from the opposite direction. The little mite hadn't been touched, and was carried off by his father and mother with great rejoicing. They also took the "pool" along with them, and right amid the salubrious water, under the circumstances to suit with it.

Tobacco Kills a Shark.

We had not fired very long before a large shark put in an appearance and stopped our sport, says a writer in the Boston Herald. We knew of his presence by his greedy snapping off the fish from one of my neighbor's lines, having followed up from the bottom. He executed this performance several times, and then the snappers stopped him entirely. Not a nibble could we get, so we hauled in our lines and commenced to pay our attention to the shark. He was a monstrous fellow, about fifteen feet long, and he kept swimming round and round the vessel, sometimes on top the water and sometimes way down deep below us, but always at a respectful distance. By his behavior body could be plainly seen through the clear, transparent, green water, and you may be sure he was the cynosure of all eyes.

While we were talking, I noticed the native pilot every now and then throwing overboard one of the snappers we had so recently caught, and as the current carried it a little distance clear of the vessel the shark would gobble it down, and in fact the intervals were so regular that Mr. Shark seemed impatient when the regularity was broken by a little delay. We saw that our pilot had some ultimate object in view and it drew our attention to him. As he was born and raised on the coast, and had probably served his pilot's apprenticeship as a fisherman, he knew how to deal with the latter, and for the shark. And how he thought so and gave him credit for it, and although he did not say much, he went about it in a very smart manner.

After having thrown over ten small fish, he selected another a little larger than the others, and with a stick of wood, reached a full chewing tobacco, nearly as large as a man's hand, down into his belly and pressed its throat together again. He held it ready to throw, and as the shark came up, anxiously looking for his fish, he barely touched the water, the shark turned over on its back and sucked it in. The shark then swam up to the side of the vessel and then below us, and was apparently again in excellent humor, when the pilot commenced his work. His struggles and contortions were terrible to behold, here and there and there a blue ridge and vomiting blood, but as he swam or was carried away by the current from us, his struggles grew gradually less, until they ceased altogether. The tobacco had killed him.

Nat Goodwin Sued.

Nat Goodwin, the celebrated comedian, is a fact, that is to say in ill luck. After having made all the world laugh, Nat is now doing the "cry act" himself. Nat was married to Miss Weatherly, a lady long known to the stage as a brilliant singer and a fascinating actress. While she lived she was Nat's assistant in all ways. But one day she fell through a trap, in Cincinnati, and was injured so that she was after being an invalid for a long time, she finally died. During her sickness Nat used to fly for sympathy to Lela Farrell, a burlesque actress in "Adonis." He so far progressed in his love making that he agreed to marry Lela after his period of grief was over. In the meantime Lela was taken ill and Nat defrayed her expenses to California, but while she was getting well the little Nat fell in love with a Buffalo woman. Sick-ness seems to have been the special base for the lively comedian. When Miss Farrell returned from the coast, intending to become Mrs. Goodwin, she found that she had been forestalled and that Nat's volatile affections had been centered on another. She at once sued him for $10,000 for breach of promise and she is going to bring it all of his letters to her, which he penned while she was at the slope to prove her claim.

Jay Gould Meets a Western Stock Dealer.

During his western trip Jay Gould stopped over for a day or so at a little town in Kansas. While waiting on the platform of the station he encountered a rough-looking native with whom he struck up an acquaintance.

"Well, my friend, do you live in this neighborhood?" asked Gould in a patronizing manner.

"I live ten miles west of here on my ranch. I'm in the stock business."

"What's your ranch?"

"In New York."

"I don't know nothing about taking keener of stock in New York, but it's a mighty risky business out here. Have you kept your eye skinned on some damned rascal will get away with all you've got?"

"That's pretty much the way it is in New York," responded Gould.

"O' what's that? If you want your stock to increase, you must take of 'em, and above all things you must water your stock regularly."

"You're right. That's the way I do," replied Gould, and with a cynical smile he stepped on board his car. — Texas Sittings

Mistress-Brigid, I wish you wouldn't go out this afternoon. I am not feeling very well.

Brigid—Pah, but that's a queer reason! I'm well enough meself ain't I?

Dum—So you met my daughter at Long Branch?

Brigid—Yus, madame.

Did you see much of her?

"Ye-s, madame; I saw a good deal of her. We talked at the same hours."

Mr. Franklin Mills (at the door).—Eve, if you and Mr. Paul Knight don't care for any sleep before breakfast, please to remember that your mother, and I do. That light is attracting all the mosquitoes in Jersey.

Miss Eva Mills (triumphantly).—All right, papa; I'll turn it down.

Maricopa Stake Conference.

The quarterly conference of the Maricopa Stake was held at Mesa on the 29th and 30th of September, 1888.

There were present on the stand: Apostle John Henry Smith, Elder W. S. Burton, who is visiting in the interests of the Y. M. M. I. A., also the local presidency, the Bishops of all the wards, presidents of quorums and associations and many leading Elders.

Saturday forenoon was occupied in giving reports of the various wards and organizations, the majority showing an increase in membership.

After a report of his labors among the Papagos, convincing his hearers that the Spirit of the Lord was influencing the Lamanites as many had obeyed the Divine command.

In the afternoon the time was used principally by our visitors, whose words of wisdom and exhortations were timely and were appreciated by the Saints.

After meeting a heavy shower of rain descended, flooding our streets and laying the dust so that we were enabled to meet under the bowery in comfort on Sunday.

10 a. m. President Robison gave a report of the Stake, after which President C. H. Hake, W. S. Burton and Apostle J. H. Smith occupied the time. They dwelt especially upon the word of wisdom, the operations of the Holy Ghost, the Priesthood, its organization and purpose, and the necessity of teaching the youth the ways of the Lord, if we would stand blameless before Him.

2 p. m. The sacrament was administered, when the general and local authorities of the Church were unanimously sustained, and the statistical report read was given. Bishop Samuel Openshaw, with B. Farland Johnson and Noah Brimhall as his counselors, were called to preside over it. The balance of the time was used by Apostle Smith, and through the outpouring of the Spirit of God, the Saints were fed the bread of life for which they hungered.

In the evening a meeting of the Young Men's and Young Ladies' Associations, with the Primary Association and Sunday schools, was held, at which Elder Burton instructed them in the management of their societies.

Geo. Cassady, Clerk.

THE RUINS OF YUCATAN.

WHAT IS HOPED FOR THE BOWDITCH EXPLORING PARTY.

I hope that the expedition which is to be sent by Charles P. Bowditch of this city and other gentlemen representing the Peabody archaeological institute at Cambridge, to explore the ruins at Yucatan, will be able to throw some light on the origin of the remarkable architectural remains in that country. Since the days when Stephens described these ruins they have excited an eager interest among travelers, but with little result so far as determining the question as to whom the world is indebted for the structure, which seem beyond the creative capacity of any people on this continent of whose history makes mention. They are, in fact, obstacles in the way of the adoption of Morgan's theory which on general grounds has found wide acceptance among American archaeologists, that the most ancient remains of architecture in this country are aboriginal. In the remarkable article which that writer contributed to the old North American Review, entitled "Montezuma's Dinner," he showed that the various elements of the civilization of the ancient Mexicans as described by Prescott, following the Spanish chroniclers, were of essentially Indian type, and that the red man in a more advanced stage of progress than he appeared to our ancestors was the creator of the marvels which the conquistadores of whom Cortez was the most famous touched in their descriptions with an exaggeration characteristic of the Spanish temperament. The immense palaces which, according to the invaders were the abodes of monarchs, Morgan showed to be communal structures, and the investigations of Mr. Cushing among the Zonis have helped to confirm this view.

But the majestic ruins of Yucatan are far beyond any products of the Aztec civilization, and until the mystery of their origin has been cleared up there can be no intelligent idea of the development of architecture on this continent. The latest explorer of this region, who unearthed the famous figure of Chac-mool, the tiger-kneeler, unfortunately was too wedded to a theory to be a safe guide in matters which require the most dispassionate candor as well as profound knowledge, and Le Plongeon certainly showed himself to lack these. Recent travelers, like Frederick A. Ober of this city, while giving excellent descriptions and illustrations of the ruins, have not assumed to determine their origin, which it is obvious, can only be settled by a sifting of unquestioned learning and ability. It would seem, indeed, as if familiarity with the structures of the old world, which suggest by their antiquity and a certain similarity of design a common origin with the wonders of the new, should be possessed by the investigators into the mysteries of this subject. — Boston Post.

Short Saws with Long Teeth.

"You are much too green for me," as the horse said as he looked over the gate of the adjoining field.

How often we hear people affixing to those in others certain traits which they themselves are unable or unwilling to develop.

"Silence is golden," as the marpie said when she sucked the eggs in the pigeon's nest.

It must not always be held that people abstain from certain faults for the practice of the virtue of silence. It may be that the very reason of their apparent probity is the commission of a greater sin.

"Pray don't let me inconvenience you," as the cuckoo said when he pushed the young hedge sparrow out of its nest.

How often it happens that selfish people, ever seeking their own ends, express anxiety for their neighbor's welfare. The words sound well, and the voice is sympathetic, but the following goes on all the same. — The Quiver for October.

A small New Yorker had been having a day of unmitigated outrageousness, such as all children who do not die are liable to have at times; and when he was ready for bed his mother said to him:

"When you say your prayers, George, ask God to make you a better boy. You have been very naughty today."

The youngster accordingly put up his petitions in the usual form, and then before closing with "Amen," he added:

"And please, God, make me a good boy."

He paused a second, and then to the utter consternation of his mother, concluded with a prayer for himself: "Nevertheless, not my will, O Lord, but thine be done!"

"I'm mother knew not what to say, and very wisely she said nothing."

Two dancers who had been attempting a waltz at a ball, stopped a moment during a pause in the music.

"So you are fond of waltzing?" asked the lady.

"I adore it," responded her cavalier.

"Then hadn't you better try and learn?"
