THE HIGHER LAW.

HUMANITY AND DIVINITY.

"As the heavens are higher above the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."—Isaiah lv, 9.

Humanity belongs to MAN; divinity to GOD. The above quotation figuratively expresses the great superiority of one over the other; the comparison expressing all that the mind of man can well appreciate, contrasted by the sphere of the heavens above that of the earth. Both are evidently intelligent beings with powers of thought and action, conception and execution, but widely differing from each other.

The fact here disclosed to the mind of man that there is a far superior being of thought and action to himself, should be an inducement to seek after and find in what the superiority consists, and acquire it if possible. Both reason and revelation must come to our aid, if correct conclusions are to be reached.

Man has a positive declaration that there is a God—a superior, and he should know and adopt the thoughts and ways of the most excellent—the superior. The fact that many divine requirements are such as no one part of humanity has any right to demand of another, is evidence of their superiority, evidence of a higher law, that no human enactments can be compared with, of rights and duties not created by them.

First of all the rule that required of all men to love all others as themselves, and especially their enemies, should they have any, is a rule of life beyond all human control. A failure to do this could neither be enforced nor punished by any human enactment. It is a divinely inspired requirement, placing him who observes it beyond the reach of law, and where justly he can never have an enemy. Reason teaches us that this position is supremely desirable, is nearly the goal of perfection. A failure to keep the law can only be punished by its author.

The divine injunction that no man should seek his own, but another's good, is what no law of humanity dare demand of any human being, or attempt to enforce by any degree of punishment. The prerogative belongs to God alone as being consistent with His character and perfection. Yet reason teaches us that he who will spend his life in doing good to others, devote his energies to the elevation and redemption of humanity as Jesus did, becomes justly entitled to and secures the highest possible condition of happiness to which human excellence can aspire to or attain. True greatness consists in much service, for which the reward is sure.

The all-absorbing, all-pervading element and essence of the divine character is love. This is the great mystery of God's boundless mercy unto man. God is love, and love is the fulfilling of the law. It works no ill, but prompts all sacrifices to the giving of life, if needs be, for another, and is made manifest only by obedience, by a strict conformity to God's ways and will. It is His prerogative alone to demand that humanity shall be governed by the same rule of action, that man may be like Him, and be able to abide His glory and presence, and be perfect as He is perfect. The passions and powers of the human soul fully subjugated to the divine will, there would be no accusers because of "man's inhumanity to man."

Laws adapted to humanity founded upon the inflexible rules of justice alone, such as "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth," come far short of that divine excellence which must be found in a God-like character whose ways and thoughts are so far above those of man. Justice must not invade the domain of mercy.

Revelation teaches us that it is consistent with the divine prerogative to control the affections, the love, and even the thoughts of human beings; that they must be directed to the acquiring of a knowledge of His character and devotion to His will. Also, to prohibit the exercise of passions tending to evil—such as lust, envy, hatred and all that would lead one to deviate from the path of moral rectitude. Reason confirms the propriety of all this, but they are beyond the reach of human legislation; they can neither be regulated, controlled, prohibited nor punished by any power humanity possesses. The thought and feelings in man regulated by divine law produce a life in unison with the attributes of Deity in all those acts which can possibly be brought into judgment.

The many and varied manifestations of power conferred upon men who have conformed their lives to the divine will far exceed any that can be derived from any human source or natural attainment; such as power over disease, evil spirits, the elements, worlds, and finally over death and the grave, to reach an endless life.

The laws by which the worlds were made and by which they are sustained in their relations to each other in the spheres in which they move, did not originate with man, but all these teach him there is a Creator and Governor, divine in wisdom and infinite in power, with thoughts, ways and laws higher than his.

The fact is obvious that humanity is allied to Deity. Man is urged to be reconciled to divine ways and thoughts, and the human mind is fitted to the task. By this we know it is not only right but a duty to recognize a higher law for our observance than can possibly emanate from uninspired political factions influenced by party strife in which the general interests of humanity are usually ingored. We are told by those whose ways are not as God's ways that all this human legislation must be heeded, however much it may be in conflict with a conscientious recognition and observance of the higher law which is adapted to every want of degraded humanity, and is alone capable of filling man's cup of happiness to the extent of his highest aspirations.

The laws of God are higher than those of man and no human enactment should be found in conflict with them. Humanity can in no case be released from the power of its duty to God. Man's moral regeneration and perfection are the great end of the divine government, and should be the aim and tendency of all human governments.

Kings, presidents, governors, and rulers all are subordinate to the Divine Ruler, and can legitimately do only that which shall aid in the development of man, protecting him in the possession and enjoyment of all his rights. Kings may be anointed to place and power, as were those who reigned over Israel, yet in all cases of emergency involving the interests of humanity, they must resort to prophets and seers, as did they, for those divine utterances that must declare the will of God, and to whom all His secrets are revealed. Man owes obedience first of all to the divine Governor. All earthly powers must be subordinate to that rule, and in any conflict between the two we must obey God rather than man. There can be no question as to God's supremacy and man's duty.

A ROYAL INFANT.

The Queen's Jubilee and the American Exhibition in London—Theatrical Topics Abroad—Disappearance of Old London Landmarks.

[From a Special Correspondent.]

LONDON, Dec. 11.

All London is at present talking about the "Battenberg Baby," and the Royal infant is as much a topic of interest as was at one time that remarkable infant, "Ginx's Baby." The fact is, that maternity is always a most engrossingly interesting subject to all womankind, but it is seldom that a whole nation are afforded the opportunity of knowing and discussing all the details of one of these interesting events. It must be somewhat of an added trial to a mother, I should imagine, to have such a public accouchement. By English law, it is necessary for a Cabinet Minister to preside at the birth of Royalty. As Mr. Henry Matthews, the Home Secretary, happens to be a bachelor, it was obviously impossible for him to do duty on such an occasion, and so it devolved upon poor Lord Cross to officiate, which he did, with what feelings I can hardly imagine. It is safe to say, however, that being pulled out of bed at five in the morning on such state service would not conduce to placidity of temper, especially on the part of an elderly, and somewhat gouty, dignitary, like Lord Cross. Prince Henry, of Battenberg, we are informed, was full of importance on the occasion, and was, probably, more interested in his first than he will be in his second baby, for it is stated that he weighed his son and heir with his own hands, and in the scales used for weighing out the charity gifts of groceries dispensed by the Queen to the poor of Windsor. This unnamed youngster is the Queen's 37th grandchild, and will, probably, be known as the "Jubilee" baby of the flock. He weighed ten pounds, and developed a fine pair of lungs at once. All these and many other particulars are made known by the society papers, including bewildering details (to the male mind at least) as to the baby clothes, etc., provided for the Royal infant. Meanwhile, the radical or democratic portion of the people and press, and it is astounding how great a part of the community they are, set up the usual howl about the misfortune of bringing into the world such royal paupers to be supported by the British taxpayers. Children who are born princes without principalities or power are an undoubted anomaly, and that time will soon remove it I think there can be little doubt. So you see, as no one knows what is to become of this Anglo-German spring of royalty, he is not so unlike "Ginx's Baby" as might at first glance appear.

The Queen's Jubilee next year will, of course, be the greatest fete that Europe has seen for many a long year, if ever. There are all sorts of plans for the celebration, but as yet nothing has really been crystallised. That all the Courts of Europe will send royal delegations with their congratulations, and that these will come like the Greeks bearing gifts is well understood. That there will be banquets and processions and great ecclesiastical celebrations, etc., etc., is also stated, but the programme which will be a mighty one when once arranged, will not be announced for a time to come. My sympathies go out to the Prince of Wales when I think of the horrors before him in the way of banquets and speech-making. If he were not one of the most temperate of men, both in eating and drinking, he would "dig his grave with his teeth" next year without much doubt.

The Imperial Institution project has been postponed, and now the attention of the English press and public is pretty generally centred on the American Exhibition of the Arts, Manufactures, Inventions, Products and Industries of the United State, to be held next year at Earl's Court, Kensington. This is really the only thing in connection with Jubilee Year that is really settled and under way. There are a large force of men at work on the grounds and buildings, and everything is progressing rapidly towards completion. Londoners have been so long in the habit of having an Exhibition yearly as a place of resort on summer evenings that they would feel lost without one. I don't think, until the permanent closing of the building at South Kensington was decided upon that they realize fully what a gap in their lives it would make or how great a boon the American Exhibition will be to them.

Then Englishmen like pluck, and it strikes the average Englishman as a plucky thing for Americans to do to come across the Atlantic and hold a great Exhibiton on alien soil. More than this, the novelty of the thing is very attractive. New grounds, rendered accessible from every part of England by three railway stations opening directly into the grounds, the unique character of the buildings, which are made entirely of steel railroad rails, the brilliant idea of bringing over Buffalo Bill's Wild West, of which great things have been heard here, as an outdoor attraction, in addition to the botanical gardens, concerts, etc., and the English public find plenty of ground for the pleasantest of anticipation.

But to hark back, as I said the work is progressing so rapidly that the Wild West grounds will be completed early next month, and the main building early in February.

Theatricals in London were never more prosperous than this year. So much so, that in one or two instances the necessity for following the custom of Christmas productions has created some little embarrassment owing to the great success of the current attractions. "Dorothy," Stevenson and Cellier's opera, now running at the Gaiety, is an instance, but the problem was solved for them by the leasing of the Prince of Wales's Theatre, to which the opera will be removed on the 20th to complete its run, and allow a burlesque of Monte Cristo to go on at the Gaiety, and in this the little American, Fay Templeton, will make her London debut. "A Run of Luck" at Drury Lane is crowding the house nightly, and yet it must make way on Boxing night (the night after Christmas) for the annual Drury Lane Pantomime. Grace Hawthorne, an American girl, has the management of the Olympic, and having got that started in good shape on the American combination system, which is a novelty in London, though not in the provinces, she has leased the Empire, the largest theatre in London, and will produce "Theodora" there in February next.

So you see Americans will be very much en evidence during Jubilee Year.

The changes in London during the past few years have been very great, and have greatly beautified the city; but the march of improvement is Iconoclastic, and many of the old landmarks are disappearing. "Staple Inn," which is perhaps the next picturesque bit left in London, will be the most historical building to disappear. It is the only one left of the ancient Inns-of-Court, and stands with one angle fronting Holborn. There was a good deal of discussion in the press about the advisability of its purchase by the city, and its preservation, but it came to nothing, and a project to start a public subscription for the same purpose met a similar fate.

Therefore it was put up at a public auction, one day, not long ago, at the Auction Mart, in Tottenhouse-yard (which is a narrow alley, and not a yard at all), and sold for an enormous sum to an insurance company, and will soon disappear.

A Cairo, Illinois, dispatch says: A negro named Thomas Spicer, while intoxicated in a saloon Sunday night last, was covered with turpentine by two ruffians, who set fire to his clothes. The man was almost cremated.

A Buenos Ayres dispatch says: Telegrams from Mendoza say it is expected that the cholera epidemic will yield to the stringent measures adopted by the doctors. The municipality of Buenos Ayres has voted $50,000 for the relief of sufferers at Mendoza. Many families have arrived here from that place.
